DUTCH FANS OF BEATLES TURN INTO WATER-BUGS

AMSTERDAM, The Netherlands (UPI)—More than 30 teen-agers jumped into the water here today in an attempt to reach the Beatles, who were touring the city's canals.

"Anything, but save us from more," a police inspector said. "I guess a Khrushchev visit is child's play."

About 2,000 policemen had been recalled from leave for the Beatles' two-hour tour which paralyzed traffic on the canal bridges.

"But we might as well have mobilized the army," the spokesman said. "It wouldn't have made any difference."

Monty Fires D-Day Salvo Against Ike

Times News Services

OMAHA BEACH, France—Old soldiers joined in homage today to their fallen war-time comrades on the 20th anniversary of the mightiest invasion in history.

They gathered on the silent Normandy beaches where on this day two decades ago began the final assault on the Nazi empire.

But even though the din of battle has long since died down, old controversies raged as strongly as ever.

Britain's Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery assailed his old commander-in-chief, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, supreme Allied commander in Europe during the Second World War.

On a British commemorative television program Friday night, Montgomery said: "I do not believe that Eisenhower ever really understood the strategy of the Normandy campaign. He seemed to me to get the whole thing muddled up."

A spokesman at the former U.S. president's farm in Gettysburg, Pa., said Eisenhower would not comment on the remarks.

Marshal of the Royal Air Force Lord Tedder, Eisenhower's No. 2 man during the Normandy thrust, said Montgomery's remarks were "a pitiful example of a man's second childhood."

Tedder said Eisenhower's strategy was never seriously questioned.

"Of course there were the usual differences of opinion, as there always are in cases like this," Tedder said. "The statements made about this by Viscount Montgomery tonight were just pitiful."

American, British, French, Canadian, Belgian and Norwegian official delegations took part in simple ceremonies at key points along the invasion area.

Assault Opened Road to Berlin

On a fateful day 20 years ago, the Allies launched against these shores the biggest sea-borne invasion in history to open a breach in Adolf Hitler's vaunted "west wall" and open the road to Berlin.

'WE WON IT'
RUSSIANS TELL WEST

MOSCOW (AP)—The Soviet Union took grudging note today of the 20th anniversary of the D-Day landing but claimed the Red Army could have defeated the Germans by itself.

The Soviet military newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda (Red Star) acknowledged the efforts of the Western allies.

"However, the decisive role in this belongs to the Soviet people who performed by their titanic struggle the greatest feat of the Second World War," Red Star said.

Quebec Unit Unveils Monument

NORMANDY BEACHES (CP)

Le Regiment de la Chaudiere of Quebec City unveiled a blue granite battle monument today on the site of Berniers where the unit stormed ashore in the D-Day invasion exactly 20 years ago.

It is mounted on a concrete German pillbox 25 feet from another erected a few years ago to mark the landing of the Queen's Own Rifles of Toronto.

Col. Paul Mathieu, who led the Chaudiere Regiment's attack, and 49 of the regiment's other D-Day veterans were on hand for the simple service of dedication and remembrance.

The Chaudiere Regiment lost 200 men in the Battle of Northwest Europe, 20 of them on the Berniers beach.

Veterans Minister Roger Dutil led a host of Canadian and local French authorities who placed wreaths before the stone.

Unlike most of the other D-Day ceremonies along the miles of landing beach, this one was almost entirely conducted in French—to the obvious delight of about 150 villagers who crowded the dedication ground.

Red Bloc Nations Seek GATT Entry

GENEVA (AP)—Romania, Bulgaria and Hungary have made preliminary approaches to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) with a view to joining the Western-dominated trade organization.

Reliable economic sources disclosed here today.

This move represents an about-face on the part of these Soviet bloc countries, who have consistently joined the under-developed nations in attacking GATT during the current World Trade Conference here.

The move appeared to spell the doom of a Soviet-sponsored plan for a new universal trade organization to supersede GATT.

It was not immediately clear if the approach to GATT was made with Soviet approval.

Bennett Hints Power Export To California

LAOS TALKS CONTINUE

VIENTIANE (Reuters)—Britain, the United States, Canada, India, Thailand and South Viet Nam held their third round of ambassadorial talks in Laos today amid reports of renewed fighting north of the Plain des Jarres.

The diplomats were seeking ways to stop fighting between pro-Communist Pathet Lao and neutralist forces and to make the coalition government led by Prince Souvanna Phouma work properly.

Hopes to End Island Strike Encouraging

While a mass public meeting was underway this afternoon in Alberni, resumed negotiations were going on in Vancouver in the Mac-Powell office workers' strike.

MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River negotiators at the vice-presidential level met of file union representatives in direct negotiations for the first time Friday.

They were scheduled to meet again at 1:30 p.m. today, and an official source told the Times that the prospect of a settlement is "encouraging."

Meanwhile, at 2 p.m., a public meeting was to begin at Alberni Athletic Hall.

The meeting was called by the office workers' union, whose 64 striking members at the Alberni Valley Mac-Powell plant have idled 3,000 for nearly four weeks.

Key speaker at the meeting is William Dodge, executive vice-president of the Canadian Labour Congress in Ottawa.

Also expected to speak were Opposition Leader Robert Strachan, Alberni MLA John Squire, and others.

Representing Labor Minister Leslie Peterson was conciliation officer William McLaughlin.

PM Not Invited

SALISBURY (Reuters)—Southern Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith announced here tonight he will not be invited to attend the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference in London next month.

The basic design has not been altered," he stressed. These are the changes:

1. The vertical blue bar at each edge of the flag has been widened slightly. The color has also been deepened to "bring it closer to a royal blue."

2. The size of the three red maple leaves has been reduced

Hails Passage Of Columbia Pact

By FRANK RUTTER

Premier W. A. C. Bennett suggested B.C. should export Peace and Columbia power to California.

He envisaged a transmission line from Blaine, at the border, to southern California carrying surplus B.C. power to U.S. markets.

Mr. Bennett made the statement at a press conference he called to command the House of Commons for ratifying the Columbia River treaty with the U.S. (See Page 2.)

Mr. Bennett said work will start this summer on the $400,000 Columbia project.

First contracts will be awarded immediately the Senate gives its approval to the treaty—which Mr. Bennett said would be a mere formality after the Commons' heavy majority vote in favor of it.

These contracts will include relocation of Canadian National Railways line to be flooded out, replacement of highways in the reservoirs of the three Columbia dams, and a start on the smallest of them, at Duncan Lake.

Mr. Bennett also said that B.C. Hydro—to build the dams—is ready to make a settlement with the people who have to be moved because of flooding, most of them in the Arrow Lakes area.

Two-River Policy Now a Reality

Mr. Bennett said B.C.'s two-river policy is now a reality with ratification of the Columbia pact and with the Peace River project already under way.

"We can all rejoice," he said.

When the two rivers are produced the faster extra generators will be installed in additional development of both the Portage Mountain dam on the Peace and of Mica dam on the Columbia, Mr. Bennett said.

Mr. Bennett also said that B.C. will get first call;

2. The rest of Canada will be offered power on grids from either northern or southern B.C.;

3. Any additional available power will be exported to the U.S.

"I would think there would be a new line direct from Blaine, to southern California," he said.

"He has kept his word on everything."

Artists 'Refine' Pearson's Flag

OTTAWA (CP)—Artists have "refined" the government's proposed maple leaf flag, a spokesman in the prime minister's office said today.

The stem of the leaves have been straightened and made slightly thinner, removing the noticeable nodes that appeared in the original design.

Some MPs had called these nodes "a plumber's larmen."

The changes do not imply any amendment of the government's flag-and-anthem resolution now before the Commons. The resolution described the flag design only in a general way.

SWITCHEROO: WE ASKED THE QUESTIONS

'ONE OF THE LIVELY ONES'

B.C. ONLY HOME FOR UNION JACK?

ROUND-A-BOUT

By DOUGLAS HILLSIDE

Victoria's "paint-up" campaign for the downtown area is having a "sploshy" but interesting effect, if you'll pardon the pun.

Although some of the merchants being urged to redecorate are getting the message, other big property owners are hearing the word even though it's not directed at them specifically.

For instance:

The sooty, workaday brick buildings of Victoria Machinery Depot's Ogden Point shipyard are now sporting a gleaming new two-tone painted face—in pastel colors yet!

It shows that even factory buildings in Victoria do not have to be hideous.

Now, if only Ocean Cement would take a human being's eye view of its billious green painted wall sign along Government Street near Bay ...

Premier Bennett said Friday he will jump in the lake, just as a New Democratic Party MP suggested.

Toronto-Greenwood MP Andrew Brewin told the House of Commons Thursday the premier should have been told to go jump in the lake with his Columbia Treaty demands.

That's just what he will do, the premier said Friday.

He'll go jump in Okanagan Lake in a few weeks time—for a swim.

In fact, he added, he'll shortly go one better and jump in the ocean—at his Salt Spring Island summer home.

Still with the premier . . . he was asked Friday whether the new ferry for the Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen run might be called Queen of Oak Bay. He laughed and refused to say yes or no.

He hinted, however, that a name had already been picked for the $4,000,000 sister ship and said: "Let me save something for another occasion."

The next similar occasion is next month, when VMD hands over another sister to the Queen of Nanaimo, the Queen of New Westminster.

Although the premier resides in Oak Bay, the riding for Oak Bay in the legislature is held by Liberal Alan Macfarlane.

A 100-pound skat—fish variety—with a talent for drag racing is now resident at the Undersea Garden in Oak Bay.

The beastie was swimming among floats near the Garden when skin diver Mick Vavra had just completed a display dive.

Mick grabbed the seven-foot animal, and got towed for a quarter mile—sometimes on the surface, sometimes down to 30 feet deep.

After he wore it out, Mick and another diver managed to heave it over the barrier into the undersea garden.

As the Oak Bay High School valedictorian mounted the speaker's platform at Friday night's recognition ceremonies and began "Mr. Wallace, staff . . ." there was a rustle of laughter from the crowd.

The reason? The valedictorian was Bruce Wallace, son of a proud father and new principal of Oak Bay High, John Wallace. Bruce was elected by the graduating class to present the valedictory address

On Wednesday this column mentioned my frustrating attempts to telephone CPR at EV 6-4204, but ending up with Dominion Construction at EV 8-4204.

Now Brian Holliday, unit manager of B.C. Telephone, has called to say that his company is in the midst of a conversion period during which a number can be reached through either the EV 6 prefix or the EV 8 prefix.

He said the CPR was no longer the EV 6-4204 number, since the number had been changed to EV 8 and given to Dominion Construction. Where had I found the CPR number? he asked.

Well I found it in the telephone book of John Mills, Times City Hall reporter. Trouble is that it's the 1962 phone book, somewhat out of date.

Mr. Holliday kindly offered to send John a new phone book.

So they did, but my faith's still not very strong in the telephone people.

They addressed it to me, Douglas Hillside, care of that other newspaper.

It seems there are very few movies suitable for children these days.

The Children's Movie Guide, prepared by Victoria and District Parent-Teacher Council, lists only two out of 15 current movies as suitable for children of eight to 12 years.

They are The Horizontal Lieutenant and the comedy On The Beat starring Norman Wisdom.

Marked as taboo are several films enjoyed by youngsters we know—among them Doctor in Distress, Mail Order Bride and The Young and the Brave.

The editorial column of another newspaper advanced contradictory arguments the other day.

One editorial said "Canadians in favor of retaining the Canadian Red Ensign as their flag outnumber those who prefer the maple leaf pennant by 134,282 to 24,073—a proportion of approximately five to one."

The editorial below said:

"Figures alone don't always tell a whole or a true tale, even to those who are expert in interpreting them. Thus the provincial motor vehicle branch is mystified by two sets of statistics in apparent variance . . ."

Bi-Bi Meets Victoria—Head On!

By FRANK RUTTER

The Bi-Bi commission discovered a new brand of separation Friday night—Oak Bay and Victoria style.

It happened at 2½-hour public meetings of the federal royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism, described by co-chairman Andre Laurendeau as "surely one of the lively ones."

The crowd of 300 at the Express Hotel exceeded all expectations and expressed some pretty strong views, too.

It broke into an uproar when a lady who identified herself only as "Mrs. Lynd" got up to say:

"I'm from Victoria—I mean Oak Bay."

The commission's most westerly member, Mrs. Gertrude Laing of Calgary, had to explain to her colleagues that there is a bit of local separation here along the Crumpton Curtain.

What Do They Want?

Many Victorians said they could not understand what the French Canadians want.

"They want to control Canada—let's face it," snorted a woman in the audience.

The commission's most westerly member, Mrs. Gertrude Laing of Calgary, had to explain to her colleagues that there is a bit of local separation here along the Crumpton Curtain.

Forget Own Views

"Members of the commission put aside their own views in order to be objective," said secretary Neil Morrison.

"There are 15,000,000 people in Canada who are not French who don't know what the fuss is all about," said the man.

"French Canada has been pandered much too much."

At one stage several were shouting: "What is it you want?"

And when the commissioners refused to answer: "Don't side-split it."

Said one man:

"If you can't explain exactly what they want I say to you with the greatest respect you might as well go home."

Mrs. Alec Gunning, who led a local discussion group, earlier in the day, said its members believed Quebecers want the same treatment in the rest of Canada as they afford English-Canadians.

"They want to control Canada—let's face it," snorted a woman in the audience.

He said politicians had given Quebec 75 seats in Parliament.

One man tried to introduce a resolution that all Canadians should speak the language of the majority and that use of a minority language should be disallowed.

Nobody took it up, though two other people suggested that representatives of the two cultures get together and draft a new Canadian constitution.

Never Questioned

She said she had French grandparents and English grandparents and there was never any question about nationality.

And she had a word of warning to the commission: "The intelligentsia brought Russia to the condition it is in today and I hope the intelligentsia of Canada won't bring us to the same state."

A man who said his name was Marshall blamed Quebec for any problem that exists.

"The chairman speaks excellent English and there's no reason why the rest of Quebec shouldn't do the same," he declared.

"Explain what the people of French Canada want that they have not got under the British North America Act."

"There is no problem—only a touchy situation," he said.

It had been "a little bit exaggerated."

When he came to Canada, knowing hardly any English, he had never been discriminated against.

"I don't think French people are really discriminated against in Canada," he said.

Just as things began to get rather warm, one-time politician Eric Charman came to the rescue with a plea for unity that changed the tone of the whole meeting.

"Are we part of Western Canada—or is it the west who should secede?" he asked. "We are of the French tongue."

The Oak Bay lady said the whole nation, he replied.

"Both French and English way back in history came from Normandy," she declared.

Spit Whole Nation

The issue would split the whole nation, he said, and it is a problem for the whole nation to help solve.

"This is probably the most original way a royal commission has conducted business and I think it's a tremendous way of doing business."

From then, there was a steady stream of pleas for unity and understanding.

One man said people apparently regarded biculturalism as "some sort of monster."

Victoria University student Michele Paquette issued a plea for teaching French from the first grades of public school and offered to do it herself.

English No Drawback

She cited herself as an example of biculturalism working.

Though she was French she had not found the English language detrimental to her studies—in fact she had a 78 per cent average.

Her father, Romeo Paquette, said he had high hopes for Canada because the people who take the most objective view about action on the problem were young people.

Another man suggested that the commission add to its topics "co-nationalism."

He likened French Canada's fears to the fears of other Canadians that the U.S. is dominating our economy.

"It is a grievance we must redif our ear to," he said.

"If we have to make compromises, let us make compromises."

At the end of the meeting, the commissioners packed up for their next session in Calgary.

They will return to the coast in the fall for formal hearings at which briefs will be presented.

B.C. may soon be the only place in Canada where the Union Jack flies on, Premier W. A. C. Bennett said Friday.

Mr. Bennett made the remark as he sailed into Victoria's Inner Harbor aboard the new ferry Queen of Nanaimo.

Clearly visible fluttering from its mast in front of the legislative building was B.C.'s own flag: a sun, a crown and the Union Jack.

As he surveyed the scene, the premier said: "B.C. may soon be the only place in Canada where you will still see the Union Jack and the crown."

Ottawa Delay on B.C. Bank Would Be 'Act of Treachery'

By FRANK BUTTER

Any undue delay by Ottawa in approving B.C.'s new bank will be an act of treachery, Premier W. A. C. Bennett declared Friday.

He broke a polite silence about the bank with a fierce statement in defence of what he now calls "the most important business of B.C."

Mr. Bennett said he has become alarmed at Senate opposition to a bill incorporating the Bank of British Columbia, the idea he sprung on the province at the opening of the last session of the legislature.

He said he is prepared to go to Ottawa to plead the cause of the bank.

"Any undue delay will be an act of treachery for holding back the development of B.C.," Mr. Bennett said.

"It's a must for B.C."

Mr. Bennett brought up the issue at a press conference minutes after he learned that the House of Commons had ratified the Columbia River treaty.

Half an hour earlier aboard a ferry he told reporters that British Columbians were drawing up petitions to Ottawa seeking approval of the bank, which needs a federal charter.

At the press conference, Mr. Bennett said B.C. must have a large bank at the earliest possible moment.

The bank will mean encouragement for new business and industry—and more jobs, he said.

Among new developments being considered in B.C. by British, West German and Eastern Canadian interests are

Petitions To Be Circulated

Mr. Bennett said "hundreds" of petitions will be circulated urging the federal government to approve the bank.

"I ask everyone to put B.C. first and sign the petitions themselves and encourage others to sign them and encourage additional petitions to be prepared."

If British Columbians want to serve their province there is no greater way they can do it."

Mr. Bennett said he would take the petitions to Ottawa if the Senate invites B.C. to appear before its banking committee.

He will also take Attorney-General Robert Bonner and Education-Labor Minister Leslie Peterson, he said.

"I believe this is B.C.'s number one problem now."

Mr. Bennett said once again that although the provincial gov-wants to say which Canadians can be shareholders, he said, then it should change the Bank Act.

(Finance Minister Walter Gordon last month hinted that there would be no new federal bank charters until a revision of the act is completed this fall.)

Mr. Bennett said he thought it would be a little unusual if Ottawa refused to allow the people of B.C. (the government) to hold only a small portion of the bank's shares when American money can control another bank in Canada.

CHARLOTTETOWN (CP) — Postmaster General Nicholson said today he believes the postage fee charged should bear some relationship to the cost of providing the service.

"I believe that under normal circumstances the tax payer should not have to subsidize other people's use of the mails," he said in an address to the annual meeting of the Maritimes branch of the Canadian Postmasters' Association.

Mr. Nicholson said "newspapers and magazines that pass through the mails cost more to handle than they contribute in revenue."

Hail Columbia

THE COLUMBIA RIVER Treaty and its amending protocol have passed third and final reading in the House of Commons and with no opposition expected in the Senate will likely become law in a matter of a few weeks.

Many Canadians will think it singular that the bill was approved Friday afternoon when less than half the members of parliament were present. An issue which has had nearly a decade of discussion and controversy, which changed forever traditional Canadian concepts of the management of energy resources and which provided an outstanding example of a provincial government's ability to force its will on a federal government, thus ended quietly, almost casually.

Only the 15 members of the New Democratic Party, along with a lone Saskatchewan Conservative, stayed to vote against the treaty, while a relative handful of members from the other parties, 57 Liberals, 45 Conservatives, five Creditistes and one Social Credit, pushed the matter to its predetermined conclusion.

While arguments over the rights and wrongs of the Columbia Treaty will continue for many years there will be little real point to them. The Columbia project is going to be built, should in fact be well underway this fall and by October 1 the government of British Columbia will be richer by some $274,800,000 released from the United States through the Canadian government.

Premier Bennett claims that this sum, along with a $69 million flood control payment due next year, can be managed and invested in such a way that it will produce sufficient capital to pay the whole cost of the Canadian part of the Columbia project and to provide half the eventual power generating equipment at Mica Creek. Time alone will tell whether this claim is correct, as time alone will determine the correctness or otherwise of his decision to make the Columbia subordinate to the Peace project, to flood Arrow Lake land, and to reject the Kootenay diversion proposal.

Much bitterness has been engendered by the long debate over the Columbia plan. Particularly rankling is the suspicion that the United States got the best of the deal, will derive the most benefits and has obtained a degree of control over a Canadian resource which it can exercise at will and without regard to Canadian needs and desires.

No doubt the bitterness will crop up from time to time as details of the horse-trades, swaps and bargains which have been necessary to reach agreement are gradually revealed. But the point that must now be recognized is that these things are in the past and Canada and the United States have entered into a solemn treaty which must be carried out in full.

British Columbians must hope that Premier Bennett's calculations as to the cost of constructing the Canadian Columbia works are correct, for if they are not then the people will have to shoulder the extra burden. And the vital problem of markets for the power still remains unanswered. The Americans, for their part, must hope that the immense capital investment they are pouring into the whole development will bring commensurate returns.

Meanwhile, although the long-term prospects are clouded, the near future is reasonably bright with the vision of the many jobs and opportunities which the imminent construction work on the Columbia will bring to this province.

Nature Rambles

A DRIVE from Duncan to Cowichan Lake, then on to Meesachie Lake, will open up new vistas.

The new forest along the Cowichan Road, with its mixed stand of conifers mixed with Maple and Red Alders, shows many variations of green, especially at this time of the year when the delicate new needles of the Douglas fir stand out in sharp contrast.

Dotted along the highway are many Dogwoods still in full bloom.

Stop and look across the valley to the steep hillsides where logging operations have left scars that lie raw against the slopes. See how the logging roads twist and turn as they reach for the summit — from a distance they look like huge brown snakes crawling across the landscape.

On the sky line the few snags and trees that are left stark against the blue.

Looking up the sides of the valley you will see many grey-white snags left by the devastating fire about a quarter of a century ago. These sentinels remind us that in the hot dry days of summer danger still lurks for those who are careless with fire or lighted cigarette butts that could once again make this a land of blackened stumps and desolation.

Let us all keep our forest green and beautiful.

Goldwater After California—Start of the GOP Ordeal

SEN. BARRY GOLDWATER'S victory in California is the beginning, not the end, of the drama and ordeal of the Republican party. For California is by no means a true sample of the Republican Party in the nation, and if Goldwater is nominated it can be only because a majority of the delegates decide to ignore and override the wishes and the opinions and the interests of the majority of the Republican voters.

Lippmann

SENATOR GOLDWATER himself has shown that he is well aware that he divides the Republican Party. That is why he is pounding away at the duty of all Republicans to rally around him when they have been run over by his steamroller.

The Republican drama turns on whether the moderate leaders are prepared to risk the disaffection of the extremists of the right in order to pre-

From her travels in the Middle East, Victoria student Vicki Husband writes: "South of Teheran I found some people washing the famed Persian carpets in the traditional way, then leaving them out on the rocks to dry. I also watched the painstaking process of making these carpets. Only young people with sharp eyes and very nimble fingers can work on the highest quality carpets, for these have from 300 to 600 knots per square inch."

Johnson. But in these states the Republican tickets, which include governors and senators, would be ravaged by Goldwater's nomination.

In view, however, of the fact that on the eve of the California primary General Eisenhower himself repudiated Rossco Drummond's apparently authorized interpretation of the article, it is reasonably certain that General Eisenhower has no stomach for the fight. Perhaps he can be fortified once more. For if the moderate Republican centre cannot rally around the ex-president, then it will be exceedingly difficult to prevent the capture of the party by the determined minority on the right.

It will be difficult, especially if General Eisenhower retires from the struggle, but it is too early to say that it is impossible. There are powerful segments of the Republican Party which have everything to lose if Goldwater is the head of the ticket. In great states like Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey and California, it may be that no available Republican candidate can defeat President

Failing this, the Republican convention of 1964 will be in many ways like the disastrous convention of 1912, which split the party when the old-guard machine delegates rode over the Theodore Roosevelt progressives. The party will not split this year as it did in 1912. The moderates will not nominate a candidate of their own. But the constituency of the moderate leaders will crumble; and confronted with Barry Goldwater, large sections of the Republican voters will turn to Lyndon Johnson. During the California primary campaign it was estimated that about 40 per cent of the Republican voters preferred Johnson to Goldwater or Rockefeller.

It can be said, of course, that this is a delightful prospect for the Democrats. But, much as I prefer Lyndon Johnson to any of the available Republican candidates and hope for his election with a decisive mandate, the prospect of a Republican Party controlled by an extremist faction is disturbing. It will rupture that cohesiveness around the moderate centre which is the special genius of the American party system.

It is a dangerous thing at this time to inject into our public life such a divisive force as Goldwater incarnates. We are a great continental plural society, and we cannot afford to have a politician running for president who makes it his vocation to sharpen and to embitter the sectional, racial, class, ideological issues that we must learn to live with and to outlive.

Nor can we afford the tomtoes and the flagpoles sitting which he substitutes for serious consideration of the terrible issues of peace and war.

THE WESTMINSTER EXAMPLE

A Means to Make the Parliamentary System Work

IF the opposition decides to filibuster the new Canadian flag it will force Parliament to consider another issue—the issue of closure, concerning which we have already endured floods of pious nonsense.

One way or another Parliament must do its business, including a decision on the flag, but under the present rules little business is being done. Though the rules have been improved somewhat of late, they are still obsolete because they delay essential decisions. So they will remain until Parliament is ready to limit debate by imposing closure where it is plainly required in the public interest.

The British Parliament solved this problem long ago by using closure as a natural, routine method of democracy. Before any important piece of legislation is debated the whips of the government and opposition agree that so many days, or hours, and no more, will be devoted to the subject. Both sides are given plenty of time to explain their opinions and at the agreed hour a vote is taken.

We are paying now for a fiasco that made closure a dirty word. The St. Laurent government proposed a perfectly good pipeline scheme, now a proved success, and to get it started by a certain date, limited debate by a majority vote in Parliament. As things turned out there was no need for closure, construction of the pipeline did not start on schedule and meanwhile the government committed suicide.

This repulsive spectacle did not prove that closure was necessarily an evil, only that it was imposed at the wrong time, in the wrong way for the wrong purpose.

That method is closure, whatever it may be called, and, if the opposition tried to break the timetable, actual closure would be automatically imposed by the majority.

At Westminster, two or three days are usually regarded as ample to argue and decide any question. At Ottawa, often on a peripheral subject, a debate may continue for weeks or months while vital business is paralyzed.

Britain, wrongly supposed to be old-fashioned and bumbling, has the most efficient Parliament in the world. Canada, which boasts of being a young, daring and experimental nation, has yet to move its Parliament out of the horse-and-buggy era.

We are paying now for a fiasco that made closure a dirty word. The St. Laurent government proposed a perfectly good pipeline scheme, now a proved success, and to get it started by a certain date, limited debate by a majority vote in Parliament. As things turned out there was no need for closure, construction of the pipeline did not start on schedule and meanwhile the government committed suicide.

These little ironies may interest historians, they have produced some splendid orations from Mr. Diefenbaker and convinced many Canadians that Parliament is in danger from strong government. But all the purple rhetoric and irrelevant breast-beating have evaded the real problem and the real danger.

The real problem is to give public business a businesslike and workable method. The real danger is that Parliament will prevent government from governing, itself from legislating and the parliamentary system from functioning.

Assuredly the Pearson government, or any government, is entitled to limit debate by majority decision, provided the opposition is given sufficient time to explain its views and, if possible, enforce them. In the event of stalemate any government is entitled to carry its case to the people in an election.

As few sensible Canadians desire an election fought on the flag, at the cost of dragging it into the gutters of a partisan brawl, it is to be hoped that this issue can be settled reasonably and constitutionally in Parliament after an orderly argument.

Yet the larger problem of making our ham-strung Parliament an adequate apparatus for a new age will not be solved unless a majority, if it is finally frustrated, has the sense and courage to do its duty, alter the rules and let the people decide, at the next election, whether they agree or not.

VISIT TO ARLES

A Splendid View From the Bathroom Window

IN ARLES the Romans have left their mark indelibly on the town. The arena they built almost half a century before Christ is not only still standing but is in regular weekly use as a bullring. If you can think of any municipal arena in your neighbourhood whose cost could be amortized over two thousand years I hope you will not keep the secret to yourself. In fact there seems no reason to doubt that the arena in Arles, which holds 21,000 spectators, is equally good for another two thousand years, which makes it a fairly reasonable bargain whatever the original cost.

The arena was used in the Dark Ages as a fortress, and during the centuries that followed its stones were often "borrowed" to build churches and houses nearby. Even more unfortunate was the Roman theatre, which the Middle Ages looked on as nothing more than a quarry of ready-to-use stone.

Today only a few columns remain standing, and what was once a most impressive building is reduced to a few tiers of worn seats and a pile of rubble in which it is still possible to distinguish a capital here, a fragment of an inscription there. Fragmentary, too, are the tombs that line the avenue of Les Alyscamps; they include representatives of every century from the fourth to the thirteenth.

A great monument to the Middle Ages is the church and cloister of St.

Trophime, one of the most beautiful examples of Romanesque architecture in existence and one which is thronged with historical ghosts.

Here came the great Frederick "Barbarossa" to accept the crown when St. Trophime was a cathedral; here King Rene of Anjou, enlightened patron of the arts, married his queen Jeanne. It is not the builders' fault that the best view of the lovely grey stone tower is to be had from the window of the bathroom in the Hotel Cloitre next door.

One other ghost perambulates the town. It is hardly possible to walk into a cafe in Arles without getting the distinct impression that Van Gogh has just walked out. The original cafe painted by him ("my ugliest picture," he called it) was destroyed, along with his little yellow house, by aerial bombardment during the Second World War, but a few relics of the painter are still preserved in the local museum.

While looking for traces of the gifted fanatic we came across a poster calling attention to the fact that on the morrow would occur one of the twice-yearly gipsy pilgrimages to Les Saintes-Maries, at the mouth of the Rhone.

This seemed to be too good an opportunity to miss, so the following day saw us trudging across the paddyfields and mosquito-infested swamps and salt-lagoons of the Camargue. We saw the wild bulls that are raised in this strange environment, and several herds of the celebrated white horses which you have seen in a beautiful French film called "Cirin Blane."

We saw the characteristic white-washed wattle-and-thatch cottages of the region each with its back towards the "mistral" and every other one a dude ranch; we saw, offshore, the sharp-bowed fishing-craft, "pointus," that Van Gogh painted when he spent a week here in June, 1888.

We did not, however, see so much as the smoke from a gipsy caravan. The local information was that the gipsy thousands always turn up for the festival of Ste. Marie Jacob, sister of the Virgin Mary, on May 24th and 25th; more capricious, as we found, is the attendance for the rites connected with the other Ste. Marie who lends her name to the town: Ste. Marie Salome, mother of James and John.

The gipsy involvement is owed to the presence of one Sara, a Negro servant, in the boat which carried the two Marys to the coast of Provence. Sara is the object of "particular veneration by the Bohemians and Tziganes," says the guidebook. But we saw none; nor, alas, did we see any of the flamingoes for which the sloughs are famous. Maybe next time...

When Wally Kicked Field Goal

FRIENDSHIP and respect for "Wally" Brynjolfson and the memory of Capt. and Mrs. F. G. Dexter almost drew me, an outsider, to Monterey School's 50th anniversary last night.

Perhaps it was the recollection of a deep humiliation there that kept me away. The recollection runs back more than 40 years. We of Margaret Jenkins had gone over the hill to teach the Monterey "chirpers" how to play soccer. We let them know our intention in explicit if somewhat vulgar terms.

They licked the pants off us—as I have confessed in this column before. My personal shame stemmed from the treatment accorded me by two whippersnappers called Campbell Forbes and Clav Sutton, who alternated on left wing for Monterey. They could dribble faster than I could sprint. They ran me so deep into the ground it stunted my growth.

Later I had occasion to cheer Clay as a soccer player and Campbell as one of the best follow-down forwards, along with Godfrey Wenman and Horace Goad, ever produced in Victoria—and one of the finest place-kickers.

My admiration in later years has not quite obscured the humiliation of the earlier day on the short, schoolground pitch of Monterey. To me that piece of real estate is about as appealing as Waterloo must have been to an aging Napoleon. So I didn't go. But—

It must have been a great night for "Wally" Brynjolfson, who has been student, teacher under "Deddie," and principal in recent years there.

In its way, I suppose, it would be as great a night as the evening of Feb. 18, 1925, when "Wally" was the toast of a rugby dinner for scoring the only points made by a Canadian against the famous New Zealand All-Blacks led by that superman of rugby, George Neplas, the Maori.

We were younger then—we who came from school to line the old Willows field and watch Victoria's "Reps" pierced and re-pierced by the fast and accomplished visiting backfield—and the feats of our heroes were more impressive.

Our sole consolation that day, apart from seeing rugby in a highly polished form, rested on Wally's field goal. It came unexpectedly. He was out beyond the All-Blacks' 25-yard line. The ball was in his hands. Then it was in the air floating toward the posts, above the cross bar and between them. We had four points to put beside the visitors' 68.

There was a roar and with it the quick burst of high-pitched laughter that comes with the release of tension.

Wally was pleased, surprised and bashful. He took his cheers and his kidding—"Hey, Wally, were you trying to find touch?"—with a delighted modesty. And for months the fact was the subject of catchwords for rugby players.

Let a boy in another game try to hoist a drop-kick and the cry would go up, "Who do you think you are? Brynjolfson?" Or from an irascible coach, after an unsuccessful field-goal attempt, "Run straight, and pass. Leave the kicking to Wally."

To us who played the game at school, the accomplishment was something like the legendary gesture of Babe Ruth, pointing toward the centre-field flagpole before he clouted a Homer over it.

A year or two later, in a Fragments of France school soccer final, I watched another Brynjolfson, younger brother Harold, perform another kicking phenomenon. He curved a corner kick out from the field end line, over the heads of players in the goalmouth, and into the netting without anyone touching it. And because Brynjolfson had done it, talk started immediately about the field goal against the All-Blacks.

In a longer time than he probably cares to think about, Wally has done a lot more important tasks than scoring on a drop-kick. That's what a lot of people at the reunion and celebration last night would be thinking—boys and girls now men and women who remember what Monterey School gave to them and the traditions which Captain Dexter and Wally Brynjolfson fostered.

Still the field goal is good to think about. Sticks in the memory pleasantly while a lot of other things slip away.

THE FATHERS OF CONFEDERATION

Peter Mitchell

Peter Mitchell's political career was always highlighted by his stubbornness.

For instance, there was the time Mitchell delayed approval of the estimates for the Intercolonial Railway until the railroad paid damages to a widow whose cow had wandered on the tracks and been killed by a train.

This stubbornness led him also into a long feud with Sir Leonard Tilley, fellow Father of Confederation.

Mitchell was born at Newcastle, N.B., Jan. 4, 1824. His first career was a lawyer but this he soon abandoned in favor of shipbuilding. In 1856 he entered politics as a Liberal member for the New Brunswick assembly. In 1860 he moved to the legislative council and five years later was made a life member and named premier, which office he held until 1867. That year he was appointed to the Canadian Senate and was named Canada's first federal minister of marine and fisheries. He resigned from the Senate in 1873 and sat in the House of Commons 1874-78 and from 1882 to 1896. In 1873 he had become editor of the Montreal Herald and he bought the paper in 1885.

The stubbornly independent man who often referred to himself as "the third party" died at Montreal Oct. 25, 1899.

GREAT IDEAS

Will Shakespeare Was Shakespeare

Dear Dr. Adler:

1964 marks the four-hundredth birthday of William Shakespeare. "The Great Cryptogram," published in 1888, expounds the theory that Mr. Shakespeare was not the author of all the works attributed to him. The Baconian Society contends that Shakespeare lacked the educational background necessary to compile the works which bear his name. What basis is there for these conjectures?

Jean Wish,
1518 17th Avenue,
Bradenton, Florida.

Dear Miss Wish:

For us of the English-speaking world, Shakespeare is synonymous with poetry and literature. He is to us what Dante is to the Italians and Goethe to the Germans—the representative and unique writer of the language. And, like Dante and Goethe, his sway is universal. Whether in translation—into such remote tongues as Japanese and Hebrew—or in English, his plays and poems, his characters and figures of speech, have become a worldwide heritage.

Judging by the reluctance which the Canadian public has shown in the past to back their own development with hard cash," says Mr. Hees, "a very large proportion of the 25 per cent of foreign corporations which will be offered for sale in Canada will not be bought by Canadians."

So he suggests a carrot for the buyers:

that the government "increase the 20 per cent of common stock dividends which are deductible from income tax, to 33 1/4 per cent."

Your move, Mr. Gordon!

Finance Minister Gordon, who is only doing his job when he keeps close tab on how the economy is moving, comes up with some pleasing statistics: not only did the gross national product rise 6.5 per cent last year, but the fourth quarter GNP was up 3 per cent over the third quarter GNP.

GNP is the total of all goods and services which all of us produce or perform. And Mr. Gordon reports that not only was "the pace of advance quickening towards the end of 1963; the early months of 1964 have confirmed these gains."

Mr. Gordon concludes that "present conditions thus appear to provide a firm basis for continued satisfactory economic performance."

ARTLESS IMPULSE

Some people, when confronted with the miracle of his unique creativity, have sought to ascribe his work to artless impulse, demonic possession, or the pen of a better educated person. If we look at the known facts about Shakespeare's life, however, and exercise our common sense, we need not have recourse to such fantastic "explanations" of his achievements.

We know that Shakespeare came from the landed gentry on his mother's side and that his father was a leading citizen of Stratford. Shakespeare probably attended the local grammar school and received the limited but sound education characteristic of such schools, including the study of certain Latin writers, the Bible, and the Book of Common Prayer.

This kind of education would serve to develop linguistic and rhetorical skill in a responsive mind, although it made for weakness in such subjects as geography and history, which Shakespeare later treated with notorious poetic license.

Shakespeare did not go on to the university, probably because of a decline in the family fortunes.

In this respect, he differed from the notable young playwrights of his time, the so-called "University Wits," who had a learned background. As a result, he started to write later than they did and rose more slowly to the heights of his creative power.

When he began to attain fame he aroused the jealous scorn of his more learned competitors, one of whom twitted him as "an upstart crow, beautified with our feathers," and a mere play-actor.

Shakespeare, indeed, began his career as an actor of minor roles, and learned about the making of plays and the craft of the theatre from the ground up.

This background provided him with a solid foundation for his later vocation as a playwright and showed him the medium at hand in which he could exercise his natural genius. He apparently had the marvelous capacity to make use of anything he picked up—the staple curriculum of his modest education, the works of other playwrights, old chronicles and other books, and everything he heard and saw.

All, it seems, were grist to his creative mill and served to make up the unique world and characters of his plays.

STEADY GROWTH

His work demonstrates a slow, steady development, an increasing mastery of poetic and dramatic form, and a deepening awareness of the depths and heights of human existence, and of his ability to express it.

Yet he never lost the comic touch, and there are flashes of belly-laughter in his darkest tragedies, so that there has been some dispute as to whether his genius was primarily comic or tragic. And although he saw so vividly into the evil and darkness that are imbedded in human existence, his final work in The Tempest, after all the dark tragedies, is one of reconciliation, harmony, order and peace.

Such a wide range and marked development is undeniably the work of a large, human talent and of keen, mature perception. Yet it does not seem at all unlikely that this was the work of a man like Shakespeare, with his personal and professional background; who experienced and suffered and grew as a person and a writer—given, of course, the original gift of poetic creativity, without which all preparation, learning and knowledge are futile.

The contributions of Francis Bacon to Western thought are highly important, but to dream that someone like Bacon wrote

Shakespeare's plays is about like fantasizing that John

Dewey wrote the dramas of

Eugene O'Neill, or that Walter

Lippmann is the true author of the works of Tennessee

EDMONTON (CP) — Despite the onrush of automation much work remains to be done in North America. For the world as a whole, there may be no problem for centuries, American and British sociologists said Friday.

"I don't see automation as a threat in the same way others do. There is a tremendous amount of work to do. And, in terms of the world it is not going to be a problem for centuries to come," said Dr. J. A. C. Brown, deputy director of the Institute for Social Psychiatry, London, England.

"We are almost saying that we have reached maximum production. Yet there is a lot of work to be done in North America. If you have travelled, you will notice that our roads are still poor, some of our cities unsightly," said Dr. David G. Moore, dean of the School of Industrial Relations at Cornell University.

The sociologists made the comments at an international conference on automation and education sponsored by the University of Alberta.

"The problem of the underdeveloped countries is our problem and will be for some time," Dr. Brown said. Perhaps North American production could be turned to satisfying the needs of these countries.

The sociologists conceded, however, that automation is a threat and will "obviously replace jobs." It is also a threat to our traditional values whereby a man's status, income, meaning and worth derive from his job.

"A new philosophy of life would have to be found."

His work demonstrates a slow, steady development, an increasing mastery of poetic and dramatic form, and a deepening awareness of the depths and heights of human existence, and of his ability to express it.

Yet he never lost the comic touch, and there are flashes of belly-laughter in his darkest tragedies, so that there has been some dispute as to whether his genius was primarily comic or tragic. And although he saw so vividly into the evil and darkness that are imbedded in human existence, his final work in The Tempest, after all the dark tragedies, is one of reconciliation, harmony, order and peace.

Such a wide range and marked development is undeniably the work of a large, human talent and of keen, mature perception. Yet it does not seem at all unlikely that this was the work of a man like Shakespeare, with his personal and professional background; who experienced and suffered and grew as a person and a writer—given, of course, the original gift of poetic creativity, without which all preparation, learning and knowledge are futile.

LOOKING AROUND AT ART

Cult of the Naïve Dominates Fifth Biennial Exhibit

Looking again at the selection from the 5th Biennial Exhibition of Canadian Painting at the Moss Street Gallery, I found myself noticing the numbers of deliberately naïve paintings. Some of these are gauche rather than innocent; one or two, however, are truly disturbing.

John Charnley's Sunday Morning, with its dreamlike repetitions of imagery and its use of the rose-bud and gloss innocence of the Victorian scrap album, is a good idea, but the paint is not as shrewd as the intelligence behind it: the figures lack that supernatural clarity which causes the dream to be more real than reality.

This is, however, present in Alex Colville's Swimmer; the real and the surreal meet here in a painting which trespasses upon the fantastic only because it treats actuality with more than normal decisiveness and precision.

This is also true of Christopher Pratt's House and Barn, a painting which controls its whites and shadows with a subtlety worthy of Ben Nicholson without becoming in any way academic.

But of all these usages of the naïve, the most delightful is Nineteen Ten: Remembered by Jean Paul Lemieux. This has the wistful, yet startling, clarity and sentiment of an L. P. Hartley novel about childhood.

The faces are idealized, yet particular; the figures have been formalized by memory, yet are tenacious of their quirkish individualities. The space that separates and joins them is space in the mind as well as for the eye; it portrays time and forgetfulness and the frightening selectivity of nostalgia.

These paintings, using so-called "primitive" modes, are searching for ways to show the mind transforming reality. Margaret Peterson's Lottery Played by the Gods is primitive in a different way.

Her vocabulary of forms has been compared to that of Kwakiutl and Haida carvers, but it is really a much more universal language. If it reminds us of African, American Indian, Eskimo, or Bengali "folk art," it is because it underlies them all.

It is, I feel, a remaking of a basic symbolic language. This occurred to me once again on looking at this big triptych, which seems to suffer from the painter's desire to emphasize the spontaneity of the vision. The brush-strokes are light and quick, and the paint is thin in places where the forms demand to be dwelt upon and emphasized.

There are single brush-strokes which, admirable in themselves, yet deprive the images of that richness which can come only from a heavier use of pigment. Lack of paint often feels like lack of conviction, and this is a pity, for Margaret Peterson is quite clearly one of the most original and powerful painters we have.

Margaret Peterson reveals passion by means of her rituals and gods. Graham Caughey displays it in a less metaphysical manner. His Two Figures are human and actively engaged with each other.

The paint is used gaily and energetically; there is comedy as well as fury in it, and the vivid sensuality is tempered by

This painting seems to show up the equally sensual painter-ings of Rita Letendre and Peter Daglish as lacking in control, and making too obvious use of violence.

Rita Letendre's painting is also unfortunate in drawing attention away from James T. McElheron's nearby Au bord de la mer et plaisir d'ois-eaux.

This picture is badly hung. The yellow curtained window beside it causes the subtle interplay of blues and greens to be deadened. Pull the curtain aside, though, as I did, and the painting immediately becomes one of the best in the show, and a powerful fusion of feeling and form.

This fusion is not always achieved. Even Maxwell Bates' Evening Faces II is, unfortunately, a little chill, a little remote, and Takao Tanabe and Charles Playfair have produced mere designs.

On the other hand, there are paintings by York Wilson, Frank Palmer, and the infinitely subtle Kazuo Nakamura which, fusing form, manner, texture, and that most elusive ingredient, humor, make a visit to the Moss Street Gallery before the show closes an essential exploration for anybody with his eyes open.

BOOKS and BOOKMEN

By DONALD STAINSBY

It has been for some time the fashion to shake our heads about youngsters coming out of high school and wonder at their lack of learning, particularly when it comes to setting such thoughts as they do have down on paper. But beside the botched-up "paragraphs" and essays which are often displayed should be placed such exhibits as the little volume I had the pleasure of looking at this week.

Its title is Restricted, and its subtitle aptly describes it: "An anthology of poetry restricted to high school."

It contains the work of 14 Greater Victoria high school students. Its impetus and the largest single group of poets came from Mount Douglas but its contributors are not confined to the one school.

The worst of the poems is quite good and the best is a great deal better than that. I'm not going to single out either poets or poems for praise or blame. It is the venture that matters here.

For this is an extra-curricular student affair. Teachers were consulted and gave it their best wishes. But they neither concealed nor "spooned" it.

For this I think both students and teachers are to be highly praised. The students for writing poetry and producing this volume. The teachers for egging them on, yet, especially, declining to interfere.

I would hope that such a purely literary publication would appear at least annually. Perhaps quarterly. Perhaps one in every high school. Why should science alone have its "fairs" and all the prizes and all the glory? If ever we are to bridge the gap between C. P. Snow's "two cultures": the high school would seem the place to begin.

Who knows but what publications of this kind might, in Victoria, help produce a poet once in five years or so.

At any rate, my praise for Restricted is unrestricted. I hope something further comes of it. Let us love our poets, especially when they're young.

Alfred Knopf, the deservedly respected American publisher, is engaged in an unprecedented venture: he is introducing a new to the U.S. writer with the simultaneous publication of three of her books. The author: Margaret Laurence. The books: The Stone Angel, which I praised recently; The Tomorrow-Tamer and Other Stories, and New Wind in a Dry Land, an account of her experiences in Somaliland which was published in Canada last year as The Prophet's Camel Bell.

As Mr. Knopf says: "I don't think anything I could say about Mrs. Laurence's books, about my confidence in her present accomplishment and her future development could possibly be more impressive than this unusual gamble."

The Canada Council has made grants for the translation into French of the two novels by Hugh MacLennan, author of the classic Two Solitudes. They are The Watch That Ends the Night and Barometer Rising. Another grant will pay for the translation into English of Histoire de la Littérature Canadienne-Evangélique by Gerard Tougas of the University of B.C.

I must welcome an old friend to Victoria's booky world, Miss Ivy Mickelson has finally got a book store of her own after 10 years of dreaming and working in Foyles and Bumpus in London, the Gotham Book Mart in New York City, and Duthie's in Vancouver. It's here, where she first sold books at Diggion-Hedden Ltd. in 1947, it's called Ivy's Bookshop and it's a smart, bright store located at 1507 Willow Place, next door to the Oak Bay Leader. I commend her to you, gentle readers.

They range over a wide variety of subject matter—NATO, the United Nations, Education, National Unity, Suez, Korea and other matters of national and international concern.

They were selected and edited with care, and reflect not only "the best of Pearson," but a desire on the part of the editor to give to the average reader a smorgasbord rather than a full course dinner of ideas and opinions expressed over the years by the prime minister.

They make interesting reading. This book will be valued especially by those interested in Canadian external affairs.

Insight Through Science Not Only Path to Truth

SCIENCE: THE GLORIOUS ENTERTAINMENT, by Jacques Barzun; University of Toronto Press, 1964, $6.00. Reviewed by K. J. Bishop with their fellows to realize that there are more ways than one of looking at life, and that while science can sometimes give insights, it is not the only road to truth:

"The great fact remains that the mind continues to 'take' reality in myriad ways, ways which, after all errors have been sifted out, cannot be goaded or measured against one another."

The newly rich in scientific lore insist that water is H₂O and cannot be those spinning diamonds you see on the lawn. He is sure that the birds are not really singing, hopping, and flying about in a delightful way, because all they are doing is mating, feeding, and avoiding their enemies.

His monogamous attachment to one idea is at the cost of putting his senses and his candor in escrow. For the sake of pursuing one sublime entertainment of the mind, he prohibits other, no less admirable entertainments and drives us to claim that Blake:

"Earth was not Earth before her sons appeared."

This is a book calculated to annoy many. But since Barzun intends it as a "spur to reason," one must logically expect it to draw blood.

THE SOUNDING BOARD

Our New Music School Has Everything But a Roof Over Its Head

Sometimes I have felt like shouting: "Is anyone listening out there?"

And sometimes I know there are listeners because I get answers. But the answers don't always come at the times or in the way that would be most useful.

Right now, for example, I'd like a megaphone and a rooftop. Which brings me to my subject for the week: rooftops or, to be precise, a roof, a temporary roof for faculty and students of the Victoria School of Music.

It is only a short-term need, for the city, recognizing the importance of this new venture, has plans for housing of Music is not just another music studio. Its format is the format of the school but they are plans which necessitate a period of preparation.

Meantime, the school's activity cannot be suspended for six months and temporary housing is required.

IT IS IN MY MIND that a large percentage of the public, even that portion which is interested in this development, is not fully aware of the character, scope and future potential of the Victoria School of Music.

Incidentally, it seems a pity that the name has to have such an insular sound. It will tend, I'm afraid, to establish an untrue image, initially, in the public mind.

Lieutenant-Governor G. R. Miss has consented to be patron and Mrs. B. T. Rogers of Vancouver, an honorary board member.

the conservatorium; setting forth secondary as well as major studies, plus required subjects that will provide two or three years of sound training for the serious musician who plans to continue his education at one of the major centres on the continent.

Among those who have accepted invitations to be members of the advisory board of the school are Sir Ernest Macmillan, who, after he had been given the answers to numerous questions he asked, expressed himself as delighted and honored to join himself to the school.

The consequent benefit to the city, its resident musicians, its students and the scope of its artistic life, is so obvious as not to need any further emphasis here.

SO BACK to the now pressing question of housing this valuable asset for the next six months until the proposed permanent accommodation is ready.

Having heard faculty head Otto-Werner Mueller describe the needs of the school it seems that these needs could be a blessing to someone with a white elephant on his hands in the shape of an old family mansion.

The ideal along these lines would be one of those grandiose reliques that include a ballroom or two or three large reception rooms opening into one another thus creating an area for orchestral rehearsals, student recitals and so forth.

Such a house would normally contain rooms suitable for individual studios and office space and its only other requirement would be that it must be located within a reasonable perimeter of the city centre.

I'm much afraid most of the mansions that fit this description have already gone the way of apartment dwellings but if anyone out there is listening who is still harboring such a monster, I hope he will answer loud and clear.

ANOTHER "FIRST" for Victoria that may catch attention in theatre circles across Canada, is being planned by the Bastion Theatre Studio.

On Sept. 25, the first Theatre Arts Ball to be held in this city will take place with the theme, "Victoria Theatre Then and Now."

This opportunity will also be offered to leading theatre centres across Canada, with representatives invited to attend as guests of honor.

Canadians Return To Landing Sites

By BEN WARD

DOUVRES DE DELIVRANCE, France (CP)—Canadian D-Day veterans returned today to pay tribute to the fallen comrades they left behind in the savage battles that began 20 years ago today on the Normandy beaches.

While joint Allied ceremonies were being held on the American landing beaches of Omaha and Utah, three Canadian regiments gathered for private ceremonies a few miles down the shore where Canadian and British forces landed on that historic morning.

The Royal Winnipeg Rifles unveiled a teak-and-granite memorial shaft on the beach at Courseulles containing the names of 497 members of the unit who died on the beach and in the European campaign that followed.

Later in the day, veterans of the Highland Light Infantry of Galt, Ont., and La Regiment de la Chaudiere of Quebec City planned other memorial services. The main Canadian D-Day ceremony was scheduled for tonight at the Canadian cemetery near Beny-Sur-Mer.

At Courseulles the Royal Winnipeggers—the Little Black Devils—have erected a 21-foot monument consisting of a large African teakwood sword imbedded in a block of granite. It was unveiled by Veterans Minister Roger Teillet of Canada who is heading the formal Canadian D-Day delegation.

The unveiling was attended by about 100 Canadians, 300 French villagers who paraded to the site behind the village band and a troop of French war veterans carrying tattered regiment flags of the First World War.

WREATHS PLACED

Teillet placed a Canadian wreath at the memorial and other wreaths were placed by representatives of the regiment, the Royal Canadian Legion and the 12th Field Regiment, an artillery unit that backed up the Royal Winnipeg's assault on D-Day.

After the ceremony Andy Bieber of Winnipeg, a former commanding officer of the Royal Winnipeggers who was a lieutenant on the landing, strolled down to the beach to examine the area. "It certainly would have been lovely if we had had a sea like that," he said, looking over the calm Channel waters. Waves up to five feet high hampered the landings 20 years ago.

Off to the left a group of artillery veterans examined the shattered German pillboxes their guns had destroyed, smoothing the way for the infantry.

Ross Bowman of Guelph, Ont., told how spotters on the landing craft had picked out the pillboxes with binoculars and instructed the 12th Field Regiment to "get rid of those things or the Winnipeggers won't get ashore."

The Royal Winnipeggers had a comparatively easy landing that morning in 1944 but were badly mauled in rough inland action two days later.

Canadians storm ashore to join historic D-Day assault.

DAY OF TENSION, INFERNO

Victorians Recall D-Day

By NORMAN CRIBBENS

Today is the 20th anniversary of D-Day when Allied troops stormed the beaches of Normandy and started a military sweep across Europe which ended 11 months later in the defeat of Nazi Germany.

Among the invaders were 14,000 Canadian soldiers who gambled their lives in the biggest and most intricate operation of its kind in war's history.

In Victoria, as elsewhere, it was a day of extreme tension. The news broke early on the radio and countless families wondered if their men were among the invaders.

A great many were. The Canadian Scottish (Princess Mary's) were prominent among the legions which lunged across the Channel and hit Hitler's wall in a hall of machine-gun and mortar fire.

For 54 days the Scottish were never out of contact with the enemy. After a week in action they were clinging to a line across the Bayeux-Caen highway in the face of severe counter-attacks.

For a month they fought over the precious area around Caen. Then came the bitter struggle towards Falaise, the fall of Falaise and the mad dash to the Seine after the retreating Germans.

After the liberation of Rouen, the battalion raced for St. Valery and Etaples. At Le Havre, the pipe band played The Retreat in the village square where the band of the original 16th Battalion had played it in the First World War.

The Scottish helped in the capture of Calais and turned northwest to Belgium, clearing flying-bomb sites as they advanced. They crossed the Léopold Canal, began clearing the Scheldt Estuary, took a much-needed rest in Ghent; then for two months helped hold the Nijmegen salient.

Many Were Sick When They Reached the Beaches

Colonel Henderson, whose brother, Major Eric Henderson, is also a Canadian Scottish veteran, retains vivid memories of the storm of machine-gun and mortar fire which swept the beaches as he led his men ashore.

"It was all hell let loose," he said. Colonel Henderson joined the old 16th Battalion in 1928, fought through the Normandy invasion and in February, 1945, assumed command of the unit, then fighting in the Low Countries and in Germany.

He commanded the occupation battalion which was subsequently stationed in Germany and returned to Canada in 1946.

Later he took over command of Vancouver Island's militia forces.

Another well-known Victorian who participated in the D-Day invasion was Lt.-Cmdr. John Godfrey Wenman, who died here on Jan. 19, 1959, at the age of 51. He commanded the L.C.I. invasion manoeuvres.

The other three companies—Abel, Dog and Baker—followed. Some assault craft came to grief on mines and obstacles. Machine-gun fire raked the beach. Many officers and men were killed or wounded and sent home. Others splashed ashore under withering fire.

Commanding the unit was Brig. F. N. Cabeau (then Lt.-Col.), of Victoria, with Lt.-Col. Cyril Wightman (then Major) as his second-in-command.

It was human flesh against lead, steel and stone. But by nightfall the Scottish had pushed six miles inland—some of them travelling on collapsible bicycles which they had carried ashore on their backs.

The Germans had broken a dam and flooded the delta. Nearly everyone suffered from mildly festering legs because of beach sand being kicked up by machine-gun and mortar fire and driven into the skin.

and throughout the invasion period.

The Algonquin went into action with its battle ensign at the yardarm 45 minutes before H-Hour, shelling German positions at St. Aubin-sur-Mer, and continuing to support army and commando units with her guns in the grim days that followed.

One of many Canadian ships which carried troops across the Channel was HMCS Prince Henry, commanded by Commodore V. S. Godfrey of Victoria.

Col. Larry S. Henderson (then captain) of Victoria, was support company commander with the Canadian Scottish troops who invaded the beach from the Henry.

"We were thrilled to be in a Canadian ship," he recalls, "as we had done most of our assault training with ships of the Royal Navy."

"The crew of the Henry were marvellous. They gave us extra rations to take with us ashore and they proved a God-send."

"We ran in and around at a depth of about three feet. The soldiers piled over and went ashore fighting. Lack of cover gave them a bad time, but that was not the only difficulty."

"Intelligence had been super-lative up to six days before the invasion. Within that time, however, the Germans had sent in another division for anti-

After the ceremony Andy Bieber of Winnipeg, a former commanding officer of the Royal Winnipeggers who was a lieutenant on the landing, strolled down to the beach to examine the area.

"It certainly would have been lovely if we had had a sea like that," he said, looking over the calm Channel waters. Waves up to five feet high hampered the landings 20 years ago.

Requires Space

The best workshop location for a power table saw is in the centre of the room. This provides plenty of space for handling large pieces of wood. Where the machine must be placed against a wall, it can be moved easily when handling bulky lumber by installing special wheels on the legs of the table. These wheels have locks on them which prevent the table from moving.

Courtyard Entrance Plan Adds Touch of Elegance

The most noticeable thing about this split-level house, designed by architects K. R. D. Pratt and S. E. Lindgren of Winnipeg, is the courtyard entrance.

The courtyard is overlooked by the living room. The corridor type kitchen with the laundry at one end has a back door leading out to the garden. In the lower part of the house, below the bedroom wings, there is space for a gymnasium. All the ceilings are sloping ones except in the bathroom. For the best orientation the front of the house should have a southwesterly exposure.

The floor area is 914 square feet and the exterior dimensions are 39 feet by 26 feet six inches. Working drawings of this house, known as Design 701, are available from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at a minimum cost.

by the cold air sinking as warm air moves in over it.

You can't eliminate the fact that eventually the warm air will become cool and start to sink but you can provide means for it to get back to the furnace or into the basement without creating a lot of annoying drafts. This is accomplished by means of cold air return ducts and registers.

For example, if you have a current of cold air from upstairs flowing down the stairs and then across one of the downstairs rooms, the way to eliminate it would be to install a cold air return register and duct on the upstairs landing.

If this is not practical, a register and duct can be installed at the bottom of the stairs. You'll still have a draft of air coming down the stairs but it won't flow across the rooms on the lower floors.

Drafts that do occur in downstairs rooms are easy to handle for in most cases it's a simple matter to install a register in the floor so that the cold air has easy access to the crawl space or basement.

The lack of an adequate number or proper size cold air returns can be very harmful to even the most modern forced warm air heating system.

Hardboard, the smooth surfaced material with no knots or grain, is made from wood fibres pressed into boards of the desired thickness.

Although its brown color often is left untouched or given a clear finish, it can be painted successfully with any color or type of paint.

Surface preparation is as important as with any other material to be painted. Water and a mild soap will take care of dirt. Grease can be removed with naphtha or carbon tetrachloride. The hardboard must be completely dry before any paint is applied.

Better results will be obtained if a primer coat precedes the exact shade desired. This can be any of the regular primers used for hardwood or merely a thinned coat of what will be the eventual finish coat. Where an exceptionally fine finish is desired, sand lightly between coats.

House Hunting Major Problem For Everyone

Searching for a home is a universal occupation. Sooner or later we have to meet this problem of providing living accommodation for ourselves and our families, whether it be the leasing of an apartment, renting a house, or having a home built.

We may be searching for a permanent place to live or just looking around for temporary quarters, still the same questions must be answered—what part of town do we want to live in?

Where will we find easy access to work, to schools, to church and shopping facilities? Is it more economical to rent a place than to invest in a home of our own at this stage?

Eventually every adult is faced with one or more of these questions.

For a contented home life much depends on how wisely we approach this problem of finding safe, sound, attractive and comfortable living accommodation at the right price and in a convenient location.

Whether it is stacks of books on the desk and packed away in boxes, or dozens of paint cans standing on the basement floor, every homeowner soon finds a number of reasons why his house doesn't have enough shelves.

The shelves you plan yourself—whether you put them up or have the job done—will suit your needs better than anything that comes with any house, unless you had it designed yourself.

FOR BOOKS

An 8-inch deep shelf will take care of most books, but others will need 12 inches or more. If the shelves are fixed, vary the distance between shelves as well. If they are adjustable, vary height to suit.

Allow yourself a little more than an inch of finger room above the tops of books.

Adventurous Types Aged 25-50 Decline to Take 'Easy' Trips

A study of travel trends recently completed by a major Canadian airline has revealed a fundamental difference between tourists, the ordinary and the adventurous varieties.

Apart from excursionists with European ethnic ties, who include a substantial percentage of adventurous types, the study revealed that about 20 per cent of those interviewed in the Vancouver area were in the "adventurous" category, with the percentage falling off slightly in the prairie cities of Calgary and Edmonton.

The balance included "ordinary" tourists, business people and splinter classifications.

Prior to lifting the two groups of figures from Canadian Pacific Airlines' statistical sheets and examining the people, let's have a look at the average Canadian traveller...

be he prosaic or be he dashing, Mr. Canadian Traveller is a youthful chap, anywhere from 26 to 45 years old. He may be a white collar worker, but many, particularly in the case of European-born Canadians, are blue collar types.

He earns $4,000 or more annually and has been saving a year or more for his European trip.

FUN IN COMMON

Fun is one factor common to both groups, but the adventurous and the ordinary tourists find it in different ways.

The latter might collect new countries like postage stamps. He wants to see as much as he can, preferably things he has always heard about.

The Eiffel Tower, the Colosseum and Magellan's are some of the spots he'll crowd into a busy pre-arranged schedule.

Adventurous tourists will probably wend their way to many of the same places, but prefer-

Life on Cariboo Ranch Wasn't Entirely a Ball

On returning to Canada soon after the war, I had an urge to discover how people live in those wild and lonely places of northwestern British Columbia.

So, with a Canadian friend-city-boy like myself—I stayed on a rough-neck ranch about 45 miles out in the bush from the Cariboo Highway. To reach the Cariboo we travelled 500 miles or so in an old Ford car from Vancouver and then, turning off the highway, plowed through slush and mud to our objective.

The rainy season was only just over and the going was rough.

Too Polite

The ranch was not the kind that usually attracts city dwellers and we were glad of it, for we had decided to get right away from the so-called dude ranch where tired millionaires dress like cowboys and enjoy hotel comforts.

We ate with the cowboys, helped with the horses, the washing up, and the butter churning. I think they thought us funny but were too polite to show it.

Our host, a rugged specimen of the great outdoors with massive shoulders and that clear-eyed weather-beaten look, suggested one day that we should accompany him and his wife and some of the cowboys to the half-yearly ranchers' ball about 10 miles away.

"You could go in your car," he said. "The trail's a bit narrow in places but you can get through."

We scorned the idea. Having ridden around the ranch a few times on two rather elderly horses, we had few fears. Surely it was just a matter of riding from one neck of the woods to another.

"We ride with you," I said stoutly. The rancher shrugged his big shoulders.

"Okay," he grinned, "but don't say I didn't warn you."

My horse, Blackie, was fully 20 years old but quite frisky enough for the trip. His only shortcoming as a horse was his mind which was so very much his own. We had gone less than 200 yards when he suddenly tired of the whole thing, turned tail and trotted back to the corral, where I was soon marooned in what seemed like a sea of horses.

But the rancher was after us. He caught Blackie by the halter and propelled him out of the jostling throng. Blackie saw the game was up and obediently trotted me back along the trail to the point where the others were waiting.

"Come on you two. You're not at the movies now. Lots of nice girls waiting to dance."

We danced.

Grazing horses were tied up around the schoolhouse. Out in the fields stood lonely farm carts, abandoned while their owners danced the evening out and the morning in.

Inside, the schoolroom was packed. Burly ranchers danced the Heel and Toe with their buxom wives; their shapely daughters setting the pace for tall energetic cowboys. The dancers revolved around a smoky wood stove in the centre of the room. Two fiddlers and an accordion player sat in one corner. The schoolmarm—a wavy grey-haired woman with a kindly but hard-tryed look—sat in another.

Young parents actually parked their babes under the chairs while they danced, and I was amazed at their apparent indifference to the noise—they actually slept through it.

My friend and I sought out a vacant corner and gingerly relaxed on a hard wooden bench, well content with a spectator role. But our rancher host had other ideas.

"Come on you two. You're not at the movies now. Lots of nice girls waiting to dance."

We danced.

Safe in the arms of a capacious ranch wife, I lurched around the room to the thumping strains of a giddy waltz. And, peering over her plump-shoulder, I noted with grim satisfaction that my companion was in a similar state of mind.

It tasted good. I drank a second and a third and returned to the schoolroom with lighter limbs to prance through another Heel and Toe.

My elation was short-lived.

Suddenly I began to feel sick.

and with a hasty word of excuse to my partner, hurried out into the cool morning air.

Have you ever felt stiff, sore, cold, tired and illious all at the same time? I don't think I've ever been more acutely uncomfortable, not even with the army during the war. Yet I can never forget the glory of that backwoods scene, with the east turning to rose in the first hesitant light of an early dawn.

A million birds were singing in the woods, and I thought how different the joyous chorus would have sounded under different circumstances. As it was, my taste for the great outdoors had turned slightly sour. I yearned for a downy bed in a comfortable hotel and an elevator to take me to it. The thought of my journey back was almost gruesome.

I didn't have to wait too much longer. Around 4 in the morning, like some hymn of deliverance, the fiddles began to squeal God Save the Queen from the schoolhouse, now hidden by a clump of dark trees.

I stumbled back and picking my way through the horses and farm carts, approached the scene of our night-long labors at making merry. Near the entrance I met my fellow townsmen. He looked haggard and his eyes were a little wild.

Not Over Yet

"Heavens," he said, "you look all in."

"So do you."

"Well, it's all over now."

"Not quite," I answered grimly, eyeing the horses.

We tottered back to our mounts and somehow heaved ourselves into the saddles. The journey back might be tough but it couldn't be tougher than another heel and toe in our decrepit condition.

As we jolted back along the trail, the sun rose above the trees like a huge swollen orange and our condition seemed to heighten the mystery of the woods. Stealth sounds came out of the foliage about us—erie rustlings, the padding of agile feet, the quick flutter of startled wings.

Above and beyond all this was an elemental stillness that wrapped around me like a blanket as, yielding to an overpowering drowsiness, I dozed off on the saddle.

A while later I woke to find myself slumped forward with my arms around Blackie's neck, my head pillow on his shaggy mane. He had proved a true friend after all.

TOURIST'S CHOPSTICK ISN'T REALLY CRICKET

Slippery sukiyaki and elusive strands of noodle no longer frustrate chopsticks-wielding visitors to Japan. A reassuring bulletin, issued by the Japan National Tourist Organization, reveals that a new type of chopsticks—especially devised for overseas visitors—has just gone on sale at the Seibu department store in Tokyo.

In this new version, the twin sticks are connected near their base by a small metal spring.

While considered not quite cricket by purists, they are far easier to manipulate than the traditional hashi. They sell from 33c to 42c a pair and come in several colors including ivory, red and black.

Lawson Captures Second City Title

By DOUG PEDEN

It rained again Friday evening but for once this week Joan Lawson didn't get caught in the twilight showers.

Playing in this week's city women's golf championship at Gorge Vale, Mrs. Lawson returned each evening to her home course at Uplands to work on the shots that were giving her the most miseries.

Twice she got soaked for her trouble but the reward for dampness came Friday and later she cared not a whit for either rain or practice. Mrs. Lawson's payoff for practice was her second city crown, earned with a 3-and-1 triumph over Beryl Paterson in Friday's 18-hole final.

Although both finalists were below their best form, Mrs. Lawson was able to fire some big shots when she needed them in the homestretch to collect the trophy she first won in 1958.

MADE IT INTERESTING

Both had been sharper on Thursday when they won tense semifinal tussles on the 18th green—Mrs. Lawson by nipping defending champion Margaret Todd and Mrs. Paterson upsetting tourney medalist Shirley Nashmuth—but they made it interesting for the gallery by waging a nip-and-tuck struggle until the 15th hole.

The shot that perhaps swung the tide of battle toward Mrs. Lawson may have come on the 10th green after they had reached the turn, all square.

It was there that southpaw-playing Beryl cracked in a 17-foot birdie putt and seemed destined to take the lead. But Joan stepped up and stroked a 15-foot birdie tap into the cup to stay even.

Mrs. Lawson went ahead to stay by winning the 12th and moved two in front with a fine birdie on the 13th.

LOST TO PAR

Then after she had told herself, "Now I'll go," Joan went nowhere on the 14th. She lost to a par by her plucky Gorge Vale rival.

But disaster struck for Mrs. Paterson on the next hole. A "weekend" golfer who appeared to be troubled a bit by the jitters, Beryl banged her tee shot off a pair of trees and the ball was seen no more, and Mrs. Lawson was again 2 up.

The next hole was halved and Joan wrapped up the title in a neat little package by taking the 15th after Mrs. Paterson had again strayed off the fairway.

MARG PRESIDENT

Earlier, the Island division of the CLGU had named Mrs. Todd as its new president at the annual meeting.

NEARLY 1,000 IN FOUR SCHOOLS

Dark Boys, Pastel Girls Bid Farewell to Schools

By JIM BIGSBY

Nearly 1,000 graduating Grade 12 students took part in recognition ceremonies at four Victoria senior secondary schools Friday night.

At each school the scene was the same.

Boys in dark suits and girls in pastel formal rose as their names were called, the boys feigning nonchalance, the girls smothering shyness with a radiant glow.

School officials and guest speakers warned graduates of the perils of the world and urged them to be forever students of life.

Valedictorians expressed the students' hope for the future and gratitude for the past.

DANCES, PARTIES

After the ceremonies there were dances at the schools and after the dances all-night private parties.

The largest graduating class was at Victoria Senior Secondary School where 349 students heard former vice-principal Professor R. H. Heywood, now of UBC, deliver the address to the graduating class.

School trustee George Curran congratulated the graduates on behalf of the school board, and student John Anderson gave the valedictory address.

At Oak Bay 316 graduates were addressed by guest speaker F. J. Cairnie, president of the B.C. Teacher's Federation, and valedictorian Bruce Wallace.

GRADS SANG

En masse the graduates sang You'll Never Walk Alone and Now Thank We All Our God.

WHAT WOULD MEN DO without women to keep them neat and dressy? Patti McMicking perks up Finn Walters' pocket handkerchief during Victoria High recognition ceremonies.

At Mount View Senior Secondary School 180 graduates moved in procession to their places to hear valedictorian Robert Bolton and guest speaker Rev. Robert Morris.

The good wishes of the school board were conveyed by trustee John Porteous.

FIRE HAZARD LYING LOW

B.C.'s forest fire hazard has dropped to low and isn't likely to go up for a while, according to the experts.

That means the weather outlook is cloudy and unsettled.

The provincial forest service said Friday the fire toll is still light this year.

VICTORIA, B.C., SATURDAY, JUNE 6, 1964—PAGE 21

SKY JUST MAY BLESS SCOTS RITE TONIGHT

The weatherman says there is a good chance of dry weather this evening for two colorful ceremonies marking the 50th anniversary of the Canadian Scottish Regiment (Princess Mary's) and the 20th anniversary of D-Day in which the regiment played a prominent part.

At 7 p.m. the regiment will receive the freedom of the city on Bastion Square, where 300 invited guests and up to 1,000 spectators will also see the regiment present a plaque to the city.

At 8 p.m. the two companies in the ceremonial guard will march behind the band to the Cenotaph to honor the fallen. Honorary Col. Frank M. Ross will present a new set of drums to the regiment. There will be a sunset ceremony after which the regiment and its veterans will march along the Causeway.

Arthur Mayse

The sweet bi-and-bi which materialized among us on Thursday has ended its Victoria hearings, and this observer is left with a question unanswered.

Is the commission's purpose to conduct impartial enquiries, or to tenderize English-speaking Canada for a new order in which one province will cast a disproportionate shadow?

I had hoped for a close at the Friday night open session. What I came away with was an uneasy feeling that the audience had been stage-managed by a troupe of clever and experienced producers.

Obviously, any attempt at organized fact-finding must be channelled and guided. On such a hot-potato issue as bilingualism, failure to establish a format would result in chaos.

As a newsman, however, I have learned to be wary when the action falls too neat.

This was the case on Friday night.

From opening remarks by commissioners to adjournment without anthem, all was a little too neat.

To suggest that a royal commission would salt the gold mine is unthinkable. Still, I would have been more impressed by its impartiality had fewer glibly competent pleaders for a new order not managed to achieve the portable microphone at moments psychologically correct for homily or a rebuttal.

Nor was this feeling of being skilfully led dissipated by the participation in the open hearing of a group discussion leaders appointed earlier by the commission.

These, it seems to me, have absolutely no place in a session at which the public is supposed to have its untrammeled say. We need no sheep-dogs; and if impartiality is indeed the watchword, I think the commission would do well to bar these from its open forums.

Slightly Used Elephant's Foot . . . What Every Father Needs

By ROBIN CLARKE

Fear no more for Father's Day — a Sidney man has the answer for those with ungifted fathers.

"Unless you can tell us what these Frenchmen want," he challenges the commission, "with respect to all of you, you might as well pack up and go home!"

And what does Quebec want?

I think we tend to treat Quebec as just another province," says a dark-haired woman at the other side of the hot and stuffy room, "and French-Canadians as just another minority."

Treat French Canada as a nation, she urges, with equal partnership and a new constitution for a bi-national state.

The use of the elephant's foot is entirely up to the buyer's imagination.

Stools, umbrella stands, magazine holders, door stops, ashtrays for heavy smokers, cocktail shakers for heavy drinkers, plantpots for small trees . . . the possibilities are endless.

Mr. Christian got the feet from his cousin Melvin Thompson, who got them from his son.

His son obtained them from natives in Tanganyika.

The natives obtain them from five-ton elephants.

At the time of amputation from the elephant, each foot weighs about 250 pounds.

The natives stand them in a corner and allow the insides to rot until the flesh and bones can be removed easily.

Then the tough outside shells are treated and lacquered.

Mr. Christian reports the feet are fairly common going-away gifts in Africa.

Any prospective buyer can be sure the gift will be not only tasteful, but unique.

Mr. Christian hasn't sold any yet.

U.S. Cadets To Take Part In Ceremony

A 100-strong contingent from the Civil Air Patrol in Seattle will be in Victoria Sunday to take part in a United Cadet drumhead ceremony on the lawns of the Legislative Buildings at 11:30 a.m.

In the contingent will be teen-aged girls and boys and adults.

Local corps participating will be Rainbow Royal Canadian Sea Cadets, Admiral Rayner Navy League, Patricia Dufour Navy League Wrenettes, Canadian Scottish (Princess Mary's), Queen's Own Rifles of Canada, Fifth Medium Battery, 89th Kinsmen Squadron Air Cadets and Air Kadettes.

The parade will leave the Hudson's Bay parking lot at 10 a.m., marching down Fisgard to Douglas, turning right on Fort to Government. Parade marshal is Sub-Lt Richard Slater, RSC.

Lt-Col. H. C. F. Elliot, commanding officer of the First Battalion, Queen's Own Rifles of Canada, will take the salute in front of the Empress Hotel.

Following Protestant and Roman Catholic services on the lawns, the parade will be taken by bus to Victoria High School, where a sports meet will be held at 4 p.m.

Prior to the meet, lunches will be served by women's auxiliaries.

I LET THEM COME IN OUT OF THE RAIN, AND THE NEXT THING I KNOW, THEY'RE DOWNSTAIRS FLAYING ON MY POOL TABLE!

$1.75 (Ouch) For Haircut

The price of a haircut in Victoria will be increased to $1.75 from $1.50 on June 15.

The increased price has been decided on by the Victoria branch of the Barbers' Union, and follows closely a similar move by Vancouver.

All union shops in town will recognize the new prices.

A Victoria girl will be among 150 seniors receiving degrees from Walla Walla College Sunday.

DOGS EARNING HIGHER DEGREES

How Still They Sit, But Will They Get Off the Sofa?

By PETE LOUDON

Bhilwara Dandyson, Lang Syne Faye and Bhilwara Lal Wallah sat staring into space in the Badminton Club Hall this morning.

And though they weren't moving a hair, they were earning degrees in higher education.

Their mistresses had said "Stay" and they stayed as if they were glued.

That's the astonishing thing at dog obedience trials. There were 40 dogs in the hall, but not one was barking, whining or scratching.

You could tell this was serious business. Bhilwara Dandyson and Lang Syne Faye, a corgi and a shetland sheep dog, earlier had earned their CD degrees and are working on their CDXs. (Companion Dog and Companion Dog Excellent.)

The dogs were intent on showing their breeding and training. Whatever the command—right turn, left turn, heel, stay, slow, jump, fetch it—they did it. You could have thrown a cat in their midst and these aristocrats wouldn't have raised an eyebrow.

Veterinarian Dr. M. L. Olsen commented, "They should have child obedience trials." He was checking each dog's fitness as they

Saanich Reeve Off to Rhodesia

Murphy to Resign Later This Month

By LESLIE MILLIN

Saanich Reeve Stanley Murphy has been appointed to a teaching post in Southern Rhodesia, and will resign as reeve when he signs a contract later this month.

Saanich farmer Ed Lum immediately announced he would be a candidate at the forthcoming reevehip by-election, and Coun. Hugh Curtis said he is interested in running, but has not yet decided.

Reeve Murphy told the Times he was notified by telegram Friday he will teach at Gwelo Teacher's College, Gwelo, Southern Rhodesia, for two years.

"If it can be done, I'd like to have the contract extended beyond that, or transferred elsewhere," he said.

NOT ONLY PLACE

"I'm not dedicated to the position that Victoria is the only place in the world."

Reeve Murphy, 48, is married and has four children, the oldest of them 10.

He will "definitely" take his family with him to the new job.

"It'll be mixed work," he said, "teaching English as a second language—probably teaching teachers to teach English as a second language."

CHALLENGED REEVE

A Victoria first class fireman was appointed to the job, and Saanich firefighters protested at a recent council meeting.

Reeve Murphy refused to back down, and at that time Mr. Lum had given a raw deal.

He challenged the reeve to resign and run against him on the issue.

Coun. Curtis, who topped polls for councillor in December, said this morning only that he would give the reevehip serious thought.

TODD INTERESTED

Coun. Harold Todd, a seven-year veteran on council, said earlier he is interested in the successful.

"A contract should come later in June," he said.

Gwelo is a city of about 33,000 persons on the Gwelo River in the southern part of Southern Rhodesia.

About 8,000 inhabitants are Europeans and the rest are Africans.

5 YOUTHS ATTACK OFFICER

A city policeman was attacked early today while making a routine check of the occupants of a car on a service station lot. Police later arrested five young men.

Constable Murray MacArthur was checking the car when he was assaulted. He radioed for help and more police were on the scene within minutes.

The incident occurred at a service station at 1828 Oak Bay Avenue.

In police court this morning, Joseph A. Dand was charged with assaulting two police officers and with being drunk.

Each of the other four is charged with obstructing police and causing a disturbance. They are Alexander Kinghorn, Paul Statham, Robert Panton and Robert McLean.

The accused, all in their late teens or early twenties, were remanded without bail until Monday. Bail for each was set at $100 by Magistrate J. A. Byers.

Shipbuilder Hits Loss Of Gov't Job

Victoria shipbuilder Harold Husband today expressed disappointment over reports that a $10.8 million contract for Canada's second West Coast weather ship has been awarded to Burrard Dry Dock, North Vancouver.

"This leaves Victoria without a federal government shipbuilding job," said the general manager of Victoria Machinery Depot.

"We have felt the Victoria area should participate in the federal government building program and have made representation to that end," Mr. Husband said.

Doing The Town

with DOROTHY FRASER

Our hearts are young and gay . . .

If you're young in years . . . or at heart . . . Love gay clothes with a flair . . . the new Madam and Eve Shop will delight you . . . They have the most entrancing things to wear . . . suits and coats and dresses . . . imaginative sportswear . . . slims and sweaters and accessories like handbags and costume jewellery . . . quite different from what you usually see . . . And sizes start as small as three . . . right up to 15 . . . Moreover, while this shop may look like a boutique, price tags are pleasantly reasonable . . . you're not likely to wreck your clothes budget if you spot something you simply can't resist! . . . We're mad about the Polly Peck dresses . . . some of which, admittedly, are slightly on the mad side themselves . . . In a more restrained mood are the Italian hand-knit suits with brass buttons, four fake pockets, long-sleeved silk blouses . . . The camelhair skirts, Bermuda shorts and overblouse tops trimmed with handstitching . . . You'll find lots of separates or 2-piece outfits . . . And it seemed to us . . . perhaps in keeping with last week's Swiftsure . . . that we detected a distinct . . . and very attractive . . . nautical touch on many of the dresses and tops . . . Madam and Eve Shop, Trounce Alley, EV 3-1177.

For a sweet young mermaid: Ruffled white cotton eyelet cover-up . . . over matching bikini . . . and white eyelet swim cap.

For a foot-happy summer . . .

The trouble with most of the nice stores we call on . . . like Munday's . . . is, they're modest . . . They won't come out like Cassius Clay and say "I am the greatest" . . . We, however, have no such reticence . . . and having had a good look at all Munday's have to offer . . . both in front and behind the scenes . . . we don't hesitate to tell them they're one of the finest shoe stores in this country . . . both from the calibre of fine shoes they sell . . . and the very wide range of styles, colors and sizes they carry . . . Last visit we were smitten with their Joyce shoes . . . marvelously soft and flexible . . . intriguingly styled . . . The one called "Left Bank" is a chic plain pump with roll top and little set-back heel of the kind Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy usually wears . . . comes in white, and black . . . antiqued platinum, Irish oats, cinnamon and red sweet calf . . . also pink, orange and sky blue . . . Dressy enough for any occasion . . . "Time Saver" has low stacked heel and a rippled rubber sole which literally propels you forward and takes the effort out of walking . . . perfect for the woman-on-the-go . . . White and most of the colors already mentioned . . . "Count Down," debuts in white, red or beige patent, as well as sweet kid . . . Lots more, too, and all at one price, $14.35 . . . Munday's, 1203 Douglas St., EV 3-2321.

Light colored and white patent shoes will twinkle on many a shapely foot this summer.

Delightful togs for toddlers . . .

Having just paid one of our periodic visits to Wilson's Junior Shop . . . we can hardly wait to pass along this word to doting grandmothers and fond aunts . . . not to mention practical-minded mothers of small fry . . . Wilson's have a collection of the most adorable children's dresses, suits and et ceteras we've seen in many a long day . . . Take the little Swiss velvet dresses . . . daintily embroidered with brightly-colored Alpine wild flowers . . . the suspended skirts, slacks and vests . . . also in velvet . . . and colorfully abloom in the most unexpected places . . . or the corduroy slacks with they're real sturdy and can be tossed right into the automatic washer-and-dryer! For little men we like the navy-knit "commodore" suits . . . with either long or short pants . . . matching tam like a French matelot's . . . and even a white-corded whistle to hang around his neck and slip into his pocket . . . And for the infants, there are sweaters, play suits, bonnets and blankets in wide cotton mesh . . . insulated so they're cool in summer and warm in winter . . . Very inexpensive as well as pretty and practical . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., EV 2-7177.

In Paris when it drizzles: rain ponchos in waterproofed printed taffeta. All-enveloping and practical.

Canadian furs . . . the world's finest . . .

Just back from the East, where he's been attending the fur fashion shows, is Mr. Scuby of Scuby Furs . . . and with him a collection of new fur garments the like of which we doubt has ever been seen in Victoria! . . . Beautiful furs superbly styled . . . Everything from "little" furs in the shape of stoles, caplets and jackets . . . to magnificent full-length minks in dark ranch, sapphire and mocha shades . . . A speckled black and white kidskin coat, trimmed with leather, is an eye-catcher . . . Little white fox caplets so perfect for evening . . . Light-weight, silky-soft black broadtail jackets with grosgrain ribbon inlays giving an interesting striped effect . . . And in this small broadtail and inlay, straight cut stoles which are very new this year, and extremely handsome and versatile . . . There are some beautiful shades of China mink in jackets and 3/4-length coats . . . And we noticed some excellent buys on black and grey Persian lamb jackets with mink collars . . . We hear an old friend in furs . . . Hudson seal . . . is staging a comeback . . . at Scuby's of course . . . We'd like to add that Scuby's are furriers who really know their business . . . that you can rely on them 100% . . . Scuby's Furs Limited, 911 Government St., 385-4361.

Nothing beats the snowflake-cool look of all white . . . against warm, golden sun-tanned skin.

Strawberry shortcake de luxe . . .

They say a dish is only as good as the ingredients that go into it . . . and isn't it the truth? . . . Take strawberry shortcake, for example . . . to our mind the most delectable dessert ever concocted . . . but to bring out its full delicious flavor, you need real whipped cream . . . nothing else tastes quite the same . . . in fact a substitute is a real insult to our wonderful B.C. strawberries! . . . So next time you plan a luscious berry dessert, ask your Northwestern Home Service Salesman for a bottle of their fresh local whipping cream . . . It's unconditionally guaranteed . . . delivered fresh to your door daily . . . and what a convenience and time-saver this is! . . . Your Northwestern milkman has lots of other good things, too . . . pink lemonade which is a fine thirst-quencher these warm days . . . and a brand new product . . . Velvet Cream Cheese . . . the like of which you've never tasted, and about which we'll tell you more next time . . . Getting back to strawberries, enjoy plenty of them this month . . . laden with fresh Northwestern Creamery whipped cream . . . (and for successful whining, he sure to have the bowl and heater, as well as the cream "ice cold") . . . Northwestern Creamery, 1015 Yates St., EV 3-7147.

"Double decker" cafe curtains are an interesting treatment for small-windowed rumpus rooms.

Flowers . . . the first and last word . . .

We can't think of a single occasion in life on which flowers are not the perfect gift, or accompaniment . . . or the one perfect expression of feeling . . . From birth to death . . . and at all the big and little milestones in between . . . That's why whenever we go into Brown's the Florist and watch the girls making up baskets and corsages, bridal bouquets and funeral sprays . . . graduation nosegays and cute pottery and flower arrangements for mothers of new-born infants . . . we feel as if we're witnessing a little slice of life! . . . You'll never wonder why so many people seem to prefer Brown's for flowers when you see their gorgeous array of blooms . . . most of which are grown right here in their own greenhouses . . . filling the shop with fragrance and a kaleidoscope of color . . . Right now there's a profusion of stocks and snapdragons . . . carnations and mums . . . lone-stemmed gladioli and lush potted hydrangeas . . . Some of the colors are quite unusual . . . are very lovely . . . The principal thing about Brown's flowers is that they're good flowers . . . they're cut at their peak . . . delivered the same day . . . So you're never taking any chances when you order from . . . Brown's the Florist, 618 View St., EV 6-5545.

In Step With Style

It's Time To Pamper Those Furs

By Nona Damaske

If you own a fur coat or fur piece you probably invested more in this article than in any other single item in your wardrobe.

Do you give your furs the treatment and respect that the investment warrants?

If you treasure your furs and want them to justify your financial outlay, you will find it pays in greater beauty and longer wear to follow a few inexpensive, simple rules.

There is no rule of thumb which says your coat must be professionally stored, but if you are to attend to this chore yourself there are certain rules to follow.

You do not put away winter dresses and suits without having them cleaned . . . give your furs the same care.

You may think your fur looks just great but like any other wearing apparel it gradually gathers a film of grime.

During the time you wear your fur coat you shake it out, brush it gently and perhaps hang it out on a breezy, fresh but dull day. Furs generally are not sun worshippers.

Before storage is the time for that once-a-year professional cleaning. An experienced furrier is the only one who has the knowledge and equipment to correctly clean your fur. Perhaps not every year, the lining and examine the skins for small tears or weak spots. Have small repairs attended to before they are major casualties.

If your coat is to be stored professionally you need concern yourself no further, but if you are going to keep your fur at home all summer here are a few do's and don'ts:

Do not store your fur in plastic . . . use an old cotton sheet to make a loose airy covering. Store in a cool cupboard . . . heat of any kind dries the natural oils which are the life-blood of an attractive fur.

Give the coat room . . . fur suffers if it is crushed over a period of time. Spray the storage area (not the fur) with a good insecticide. Fur and pure wool are gourmet fare for moths.

A few dollars spent now will mean added joy on that first chilly day of fall when you step out in your cherished fur coat.

SHAWL COLLAR CALLS FOR GUSSET DETAIL

Dear Eunice Farmer: Whenever there is a shawl collar on a pattern, I simply can't get the back to come out nice and smooth. How can I make nice smooth corners where the undercollar joins the neck edge?"

Mrs. H. M.

Dear Mrs. H. M.: You are failing to "clip" your pattern before beginning to set in the undercollar; thus it pulls. This is a "type" of gusset detail, and is explained in detail in my leaflet on GUSSETS. You may receive your copy by sending a self-addressed, stamped envelope with 10 cents to Sew Simple.

HOW TO PUT A STOP TO EARLY-AGING SIGNS

Even the most skillful make-up can't hide flaky cheeks, crow's feet, little lines. But once you realize that these early-aging signs are caused by lack of natural moisture within the skin, you can take effective action! Use POND'S DRY SKIN CREAM. This famous cream contains Allantoin—a remarkable substance that starts to repair dry skin in just 10 minutes!

One Sixth of Canada Is Living In Poverty

TORONTO (CP)—Most Canadians refuse to believe that one-sixth of the population lives in poverty, says Bebbie Touzel.

"Yet this poverty is destroying people, increasing social and health problems and building a reckoning in ill-health, social breakdown and crime that is frightening to contemplate."

In an address to a meeting of the Ontario Welfare Council just before her retirement as its executive director, Miss Touzel said some political representatives are among those ignorant of the facts of poverty in Canada.

She recalled that the statement that one in six is in a state of poverty was pooh-poohed as an irresponsible exaggeration recently in the Ontario legislature.

Most elected representatives believe it politically sound to oppose most needed social reforms, she said. Delinquents were still treated as if they could be reformed through punishment, and the current methods of retraining those who have lost jobs through automation caused 50 per cent or more to drop out.

Miss Touzel was chief of staff with the Ottawa Public Welfare Department before taking the post here. She was called to organize emergency relief in the Red River flood in Winnipeg and was on the federal cabinet committee on manpower.

She originally intended to become a doctor but recalls that at her home in Renfrew, Ont., this idea was not encouraged.

"When I decided to go to the University of Toronto and take up social service work my father thought it was just as weird an idea, but there wasn't any difficulty."

Choral Wedding Held In St. Aidan's Church

Rev. A. G. MacLeod officiated at the choral ceremony in St. Aidan's Church this afternoon that united Gloria Rose Woods and Ken Noel Allan.

Prior to the service, organist, Mrs. Vera Barclay, played "Jesus, Joy of Man's Desiring" and organ processional was "Praise My Soul, the King of Heaven." During the ceremony, the junior choir sang, "Lord, Who at Canas Wedding Feast" from Crimond.

Baskets of gladioli, carnations and stocks decorated the church for the ceremony that united the daughter of Mrs. Lillian Woods, Courtenay, and the late R. T. Woods, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Allan, 1875 Feltham Road. Robert T. Woods gave his sister in marriage.

The bride wore a slim-skirted floor-length gown of Swiss eyelet overlaid with white organza. Her scalloped veil misted from a pearl-trimmed circlet. She carried a white prayer book topped with gardenias.

Only attendant, Mrs. Donald M. Whitley, wore a floor-length gown of turquoise Swiss eyelet with organza picture hat on tone. White rosebuds were in her bouquet.

Peter King was best man and guests were ushered to their pews by Hugh Moonen and Jack Vincent.

John Pickburn proposed toast to the bride's happiness at a reception which followed in the Mystic Lane home of Dr. and Mrs. D. M. Whitley.

Following a honeymoon trip to Banff, the newlyweds will make their home in Edmonton, Alta.

The bride's going-away outfit was a coachman style dress of cream linen with gold accessories.

"Some people may come here to retire but we think Victoria is a wonderful place to have a whoop-de-doo!" Mrs. Jeanette Smith, Boston, left, and her three sisters, Mrs. Frank (Ruby) Fogel, Vancouver;

Mrs. Birdie Culleton, Antigonish, N.S., and Mrs. Ruth Lantz, Parkesboro, N.S., are thoroughly enjoying their brief holiday in Victoria. This is the first time they've been together in 53 years.

It's Never Too Late to Have Fun

By PAT DUFOUR

Where would you go if you wanted a holiday that you'd remember for all time? Victoria, say four sisters who are here for a two-day reunion that they've been promising themselves for 53 years.

And, although their total years number 280, they all insist that no party of college students could enjoy themselves more than they are!

The visitors are Mrs. Jeanette Smith, Boston, Mass., 71; Mrs. Frank (Ruby) Fogel, Vancouver, 66; Mrs. Birdie Culleton, Antigonish, N.S., 73 and Mrs. Ruth Lantz, Parkesboro, N.S., 70, who gaily admits to "sweet 70."

Until recently, all but Mrs. Fogel were reluctant to hold the reunion in the west "because we weren't too sure what we'd find out here."

But, when Mrs. Fogel's son-in-law and daughter went to Nova Scotia and took along color slides of Victoria — the doubters were sold.

But the delay prevented another sister from attending the reunion.

"Our sister, Susie is 81. She lives in Boston and is not well enough to make it this far. She's mad-at-us because we didn't make up our minds two years ago!"

Anyone who's ever thought Victoria rather quiet should check with the four sisters. "We think it's marvelous. We haven't stopped since we reached here — there's so much to see. And, the people are so friendly!"

INDEPENDENTS

Carpenters Sign Pact With Firms

VANCOUVER (CP) — Negotiators for the carpenters union and 630 independent operators have reached a wage agreement.

Details of the agreement were not released, but it is reported to involve a two-year contract.

It will be submitted to the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners (CLC) advisory board this weekend and if approved will be voted on in the next two weeks by the 700 to 800 carpenters involved.

The agreement is expected to have an effect on negotiations between Vancouver Builders Exchange and 1,300 carpenters employed by it, and between 122 other independent contractors and the more than 3,200 carpenters they employ.

Negotiators for carpenters employed by the Builders Exchange Thursday rejected a proposal for a five-year contract with $1.06 an hour wage boost and fringe benefits.

Earlier the carpenters employed by the independent contractors had voted 96 per cent in favor of striking to back up their demands.

All carpenters were seeking a 4¢-cent-an-hour boost in their current hourly rate of $3.14 and equity with other construction trades on fringe benefits.

Further contract negotiations between union negotiators and the Builders Exchange were scheduled for Monday.

Christian Cowboy Redd Leads Songs

Cowboy evangelist Redd Harper led 200 children and adults in the singing of Christian cowboy songs at a lively rodeo roundup at Victoria Riding Academy Friday evening.

Star of the Billy Graham movies Mr. Texas and Oil Town, U.S.A., Mr. Harper sang some of his own popular compositions, but said he did not know any hootenanny or Beale-type songs.

"I only know Christian cowboy songs," he said.

Children and adults met at the corner of Henderson and Arden and paraded through the woods to the riding academy led by Bob Ostroffer of Sydney, Australia.

After a demonstration of horsemanship by four attractive women riders, Mr. Harper climbed onto an old truck and led the singing of one cowboy song after another.

"I want you to enjoy singing as much as I do," he said.

Sunday at 3 p.m. Mr. Harper will be featured in the annual church school and youth rally in Beacon Hill Park with the Rotary Boys' Choir and the Victoria Citadel Band.

If wet the rally will be held in Metropolitan United Church.

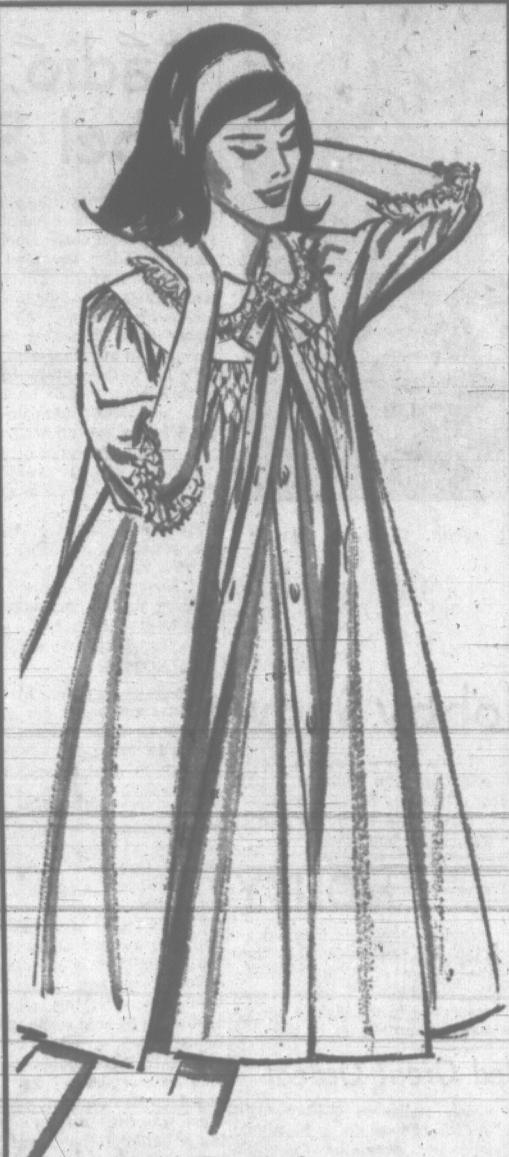

Priest-Owners Give Magazine To U.S. College

The Catholic Digest, the nation's largest paid-circulation Catholic publication, has been given to the College of St. Thomas, the archdiocesan liberal-arts institution announced Friday.

The gift of the magazine was made by the Rev. Louis A. Gales, president of The Catholic Digest, Inc., and the Rev. Paul Busard, publisher. The two diocesan priests were co-owners of the St. Paul-based magazine, first published in 1936.

College and magazine officials declined to estimate the value of the gift, toward which negotiations have been moving over the last two months.

The transfer of ownership agreement was approved this week by the College's Board of Trustees and Archbishop Leo Blas of St. Paul in consultation with the Board of Archdiocesan Consultants.

DUTCH FANS OF BEATLES TURN INTO WATER-BUGS

AMSTERDAM, The Netherlands (UPI)—More than 30 teen-agers jumped into the water here today in an attempt to reach the Beatles, who were touring the city's canals.

"Anything, but save us from more," a police inspector said. "I guess a Khrushchev visit is child's play."

About 2,000 policemen had been recalled from leave for the Beatles' two-hour tour which paralyzed traffic on the canal bridges.

"But we might as well have mobilized the army," the spokesman said. "It wouldn't have made any difference."

Monty Fires D-Day Salvo Against Ike

Times News Services

OMAHA BEACH, France—Old soldiers joined in homage today to their fallen war-time comrades on the 20th anniversary of the mightiest invasion in history.

They gathered on the silent Normandy beaches where on this day two decades ago began the final assault on the Nazi empire.

But even though the din of battle has long since died down, old controversies raged as strongly as ever.

Britain's Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery assailed his old commander-in-chief, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, supreme Allied commander in Europe during the Second World War.

On a British commemorative television program Friday night, Montgomery said: "I do not believe that Eisenhower ever really understood the strategy of the Normandy campaign. He seemed to me to get the whole thing muddled up."

A spokesman at the former U.S. president's farm in Gettysburg area.

Assault Opened Road to Berlin

On a fateful day 20 years ago, the Allies launched against these shores the biggest sea-borne invasion in history to open a breach in Adolf Hitler's vaunted "west wall" and open the road to Berlin.

'WE WON IT' RUSSIANS TELL WEST

MOSCOW (AP)—The Soviet Union took grudging note today of the 20th anniversary of the D-Day landing, but claimed the Red Army could have defeated the Germans by itself.

The Soviet military newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda (Red Star) acknowledged the efforts of the Western allies.

"However, the decisive role in this belongs to the Soviet people who performed by their titanic struggle the greatest feat of the Second World War," Red Star said.

RUBBLE RESTORED to thriving city is dramatically shown in these two photos of Caen, where Canadians fought after D-Day landing on Normandy beaches 20 years ago to

Quebec Unit Unveils Monument

NORMANDY BEACHES (CP)

Le Regiment de la Chaudiere of Quebec City unveiled a blue granite battle monument today on the site of Bernieres where the unit stormed ashore in the D-Day invasion exactly 20 years ago.

It is mounted on a concrete German pillbox 25 feet from another erected a few years ago to mark the landing of the Queen's Own Rifles of Toronto.

Col. Paul Mathieu, who led the Chaudiere Regiment's attack, and 49 of the regiment's other D-Day veterans were on hand for the simple service of dedication and remembrance.

The Chaudiere Regiment lost 200 men in the Battle of Northwest Europe, 20 of them on the Bernieres beach.

Veterans Minister Roger Teillet led a host of Canadian and local French authorities who placed wreaths before the stone.

Unlike most of the other D-Day ceremonies along the miles of landing beach, this one was almost entirely conducted in French—to the obvious delight of about 150 villagers who crowded the dedication ground.

TURK INVASION FEARED

Cyprus Alert Ends at Dawn

NICOSIA (UPI)—An alert of Greek Cypriot armed forces, ordered when fears of a possible Turkish invasion swept the island, was called off at dawn today.

The Greek Cypriot government called the alert Friday night, closed all places of entertainment and ordered all Greek Cypriot gun positions around Nicosia manned throughout the night.

It was believed that President Johnson's invitation to Turkish Premier Ismet Inonu, asking him to come to talks in Washington, helped lower the tension here.

Western embassies told Cypriot President Archbishop Makarios they had no confirmation of allegations that six Turkish ships lay off the northern coast of Cyprus.

Rumors continued to circulate in the capital of an impending Turkish airdrop of arms and ammunition to Turkish Cypriots.

The United Nations peace force has announced new night patrols to cover airports, beaches, roads, ports and strategic points where airdrops might be made.

TRADE TALKS IN JEOPARDY

GENEVA (UPI)—High level conciliation moves were set in motion today to save the world trade and development conference from fizzing out in total failure.

British Trade Minister Edward Heath flew here from London for crisis talks with the conference leaders on how to bridge the serious differences between forceful aid-through-trade demands from developing countries and reticent industrial nations.

The meeting was called by the office workers' union, whose 64 striking members at the Alberni Valley Mac-Powell plant have idled 3,000 for nearly four weeks.

Key speaker at the meeting is William Dodge, executive vice-president of the Canadian Labour Congress in Ottawa.

Also expected to speak were Opposition Leader Robert Stanhope, Alberni MLA John Squire, and others.

Representing Labor Minister Leslie Peterson was conciliator William McLaughlin.

Red Bloc Nations Seek GATT Entry

GENEVA (AP)—Romania, Bulgaria and Hungary have made preliminary approaches to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) with a view to joining the Western-dominated trade organization, reliable economic sources disclosed here today.

This move represents an about-face on the part of these Eastern European countries, which have consistently joined the under-developed nations in attacking GATT during the current World Trade Conference here.

The move appeared to spell the doom of a Soviet-sponsored plan for a new universal trade organization to supersede GATT.

It was not immediately clear if the approach to GATT was made with Soviet approval.

A SHAGGY TALE FROM IRELAND

Is Duff Daffy or Do Dogs Drive?

COLLON, Irish Republic (AP)—An Irish farmer who let his dog sit behind the wheel of his car after he had lost his driver's license was hauled into court Friday as a road menace.

Peter Duff of Mountforte in County Louth was arrested by traffic officer Pat Devin, who told the court: "I was motorcycling toward

"Duff told me," Devin continued, "that he was not driving at all—that the dog was driving. I thought Duff was joking but he kept insisting that the dog was driving."

The court heard other charges against Duff — no driver's license, no insurance, driving a defective vehicle, driving dangerously and driving while under the influence of drink.

District Judge Henry McCourt called Duff's physician, Dr. William Irwin, as a witness. The doctor testified that Duff also told him his dog was a driver who "not only steered but operated the pedals with its paws."

Duff was indignant that anybody questioned his story and insisted that the father of his present dog also had been a motorist.

Duff told the court he felt his driver's license had been revoked unfairly and that he'd taken a vow never to drive "as long as water runs, the grass grows and the holly is green." So he put his dog in the driver's seat.

Judge McCourt dismissed the drunk driving charges and suspended judgment for six months on the other charges to give Duff "an opportunity of consulting with doctors."

It was not immediately clear if the approach to GATT was made with Soviet approval.

Bennett Hints Power Export To California

LAOS TALKS CONTINUE

VIENTIANE (Reuters)—

Britain, the United States, Canada, India, Thailand and South Viet Nam held their third round of ambassadorial talks in Laos today amid reports of renewed fighting north of the Plain des

Hails Passage Of Columbia Pact

By FRANK BUTTER

Premier W. A. C. Bennett Friday suggested B.C. should export Peace and Columbia power to California.

He envisaged a transmission line from Blaine, at the border, to southern California carrying surplus B.C. power to U.S. markets.

Mr. Bennett made the statement at a press conference he called to command the House of Commons for ratifying the Columbia River treaty with the U.S. (See Page 2.)

Mr. Bennett said work will start this summer on the $400,000 Columbia project.

First contracts will be awarded immediately the Senate gives its approval to the treaty—which Mr. Bennett said would be a mere formality after the Commons' heavy majority vote in favor of it.

These contracts will include relocation of Canadian National Railways line to be flooded out, replacement of highways in the reservoirs of the three Columbia dams, and a start on the smallest of them, at Duncan Lake.

Mr. Bennett also said that B.C. Hydro—to build the dams—is ready to make a settlement with the people who have to be moved because of flooding, most of them in the Arrow Lakes area.

Two-River Policy Now a Reality

Mr. Bennett said B.C.'s two-river policy is now a reality with ratification of the Columbia pact and with the Peace River project already under way.

"We can all rejoice," he said.

When the two rivers are producing power in B.C., he said, there will be three priorities for selling it:

1. B.C. will get first call;

2. The rest of Canada will be offered power on grids from either northern or southern B.C.;

3. Any additional available power will be exported to the U.S.

"I would think there would be a new line direct from Blaine to southern California," he said.

"He has kept his word on everything."

Artists 'Refine' Pearson's Flag

OTTAWA (CP)—Artists have "refined" the government's proposed maple leaf flag, a spokesman in the prime minister's office said today.

The stem of the leaves have been straightened and made slightly thinner, removing the noticeable nodes that appeared in the original design.

Some MPs had called these nodes "a plumber's lament."

The changes do not imply any amendment of the government's flag-and-anthem resolution now before the Commons. The resolution described the flag design only in a general way.

SKY JUST MAY BLESS SCOTS RITE TONIGHT

The weatherman says there is a good chance of dry weather this evening for two colorful ceremonies marking the 50th anniversary of the Canadian Scottish Regiment (Princess Mary's) and the 20th anniversary of D-Day in which the regiment played a prominent part.

At 7 p.m. the regiment will receive the freedom of the city on Bastion Square, where 300 invited guests and up to 1,000 spectators will also see the regiment present a plaque to the city.

At 8 p.m. the two companies in the ceremonial guard will march behind the band to the Cenotaph to honor the fallen. Honorary Col. Frank M. Ross will present a new set of drums to the regiment. There will be a sunset ceremony after which the regiment and its veterans will march along the Causeway.

Arthur Mayse

The sweet bi-and-bi which materialized among us on Thursday has ended its Victoria hearings, and this observer is left with a question unanswered.

Is the commission's purpose to conduct impartial enquiries, or to tenderize English-speaking Canada for a new order in which one province will cast a disproportionate shadow?

I had hoped for a clue at Friday night open session. What I came away with was an uneasy feeling that the audience had been stage-managed by a troupe of clever and experienced producers.

Obviously, any attempt at organized fact-finding must be channeled and guided. On such a hot-potato issue as bilingualism, failure to establish a format would result in chaos.

As a newsman, however, I have learned to be wary when the action fails too pat.

This was the case on Friday night.

From opening remarks by commissioners to adjournment without a hearing, all was a little too neat.

Two more vignettes from a hearing which disappointed.

A big man in a grey suit gets to his feet, every hair in his clipped white moustache bristling.

French-Canadians, he insists, have been pampered to for three-quarters of a century.

"Unless you can tell us what these Frenchmen want," he challenges the commission, with respect to all of you, you might as well pack up and go home!"

And what does Quebec want?

"I think we tend to treat Quebec as just another province," says a dark-haired woman at the other side of the hot and stuffy room, "and French-Canadians as just another minority."

Treat French Canada as a nation, she urges, with equal partnership and a new constitution for a bi-national state.

To suggest that a royal commission would salt the gold mine is unthinkable. Still, I would have been more impressed by its impartiality had fewer glibly competent plodders for a new order not managed to achieve the portable microphone at moments phonologically correct for homily or a rebuttal.

Nor was this feeling of being skilfully led dissipated by the participation in the open hearing of a group discussion leaders appointed earlier by the commission.

These, it seems to me, have absolutely no place in a session at which the public is supposed to have its untrammeled say. We need no sheep-dogs; if impartiality is indeed the watchword, I think the commission would do well to bar these from its open forums.

DUTCH FANS OF BEATLES TURN INTO WATER-BUGS

AMSTERDAM, The Netherlands (UPI)—More than 30 teen-agers jumped into the water here today in an attempt to reach the Beatles, who were touring the city's canals.

Monty Fires D-Day Salvo Against Ike

OMAHA BEACH, France—Old soldiers joined in homage today to their fallen war-time comrades on the 20th anniversary of the mightiest invasion in history.

They gathered on the silent Normandy beaches where on this day two decades ago began the final assault on the Nazi empire.

But even though the din of battle has long since died down, old controversies raged as strongly as ever.

Britain's Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery assailed his old commander-in-chief, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, supreme Allied commander in Europe during the Second World War.

On a British commemorative television program Friday night, Montgomery said: "I do not believe that Eisenhower ever really understood the strategy of the Normandy campaign. He seemed to me to get the whole thing muddled up."

A spokesman at the former U.S. president's farm in Gettysburg, Pa., said: "Eisenhower would not comment on this day two decades ago began the final assault on the Nazi empire."

Marshal of the Royal Air Force Lord Tedder, Eisenhower's No. 2 man during the Normandy thrust, said Montgomery's remarks were "a pitiful example of a man's second childhood."

Tedder said: "Eisenhower's strategy was never seriously questioned."

"Of course there were the usual differences of opinion, as there always are in cases like this . . ." Tedder said. "The statements made about this by Viscount Montgomery tonight were just pitiful."

American, British, French, Canadian, Belgian and Norwegian official delegations took part in simple ceremonies at key points along the invasion area.

On a fateful day 20 years ago, the Allies launched against these shores the biggest sea-borne invasion in history to open a breach in Adolf Hitler's vaunted "west wall" and open the road to Berlin.

Some 127,000 American, Canadian, British and French soldiers landed on these beaches that day, at a cost of more than 10,000 casualties—some 6,000 Americans and about 4,300 Canadians and British.

The commemoration ceremonies started here Friday with veterans of Operation Overlord, the code name for the invasion, taking part in tributes to those who fell that day.

French, Canadian, American and British contingents marched along the sand only yards from one of the three main British beachheads of the invasion. Thousands of invasion veterans, Frenchmen and tourists packed the shoreline beneath twin searchlights cutting years ago.

OTTAWA (CP)—Artists have "refined" the government's proposed maple leaf flag, spokesman in the prime minister's office said today.

"The basic design has not been altered," he stressed. These are the changes:

1. The vertical blue bar at each edge of the flag has been widened slightly. The color has also been deepened to "bring it closer to a royal blue."
2. The size of the three red slightly, and their color also has been deepened. They will be close to scarlet.
3. The stem of the leaves has been straightened, and made slightly thinner, removing the noticeable nodes that appeared in the original design.

Some MPs had called these names "plumber's lament."

The changes do not imply an amendment of the government's flag-and-anthem resolution now before the Commons. The resolution described the flag design only in a general way.

Meanwhile, at 2 p.m., a public meeting was to begin at Alberni Athletic Hall.

The meeting was called by the office workers' union, whose 64 striking members at the Alberni Valley Mac-Powell plant have filed 3,000 for nearly four weeks.

Key speakers at the meeting in William Dodge, executive vice-president of the Canadian Labour Congress in Ottawa.

Representing Labor Minister Leslie Peterson was conciliation officer William McLaughlin.

Quadrangle Pulls Upset in Belmont

NEW YORK (AP)—Rokeby stable's Quadrangle pulled away in the stretch today and won the Belmont Stakes, foiling the bid of the gallant little Canadian-bred Northern Dancer to become the first horse since 1948 to sweep the triple crown of thoroughbred racing.

Roman Brother, winner of last week's Jersey Derby, was second in the testing, 1½ miles of the Belmont at Aqueduct Park, a little more than two lengths behind the winner.

Northern Dancer, the odds-on favorite after his victories in the Kentucky Derby and Preakness, was a soundly-beaten third in the field of eight three-year-olds, another five lengths back.

Time for this third race in the triple crown—which has been swept only eight times in 88 years—was 2:28 2/5.

Quadrangle won $110,850 of the total purse of $154,600.

The winner paid $15.10, $6.50 and $2.70. Roman Brother returned $8.10 and $2.90 and Northern Dancer was $2.10 to show.

Hill Rise finished in fourth place.

Quadrangle, owned by Paul Mellow's Rokeby Stables, was ridden by Manuel Yanez.

Yanez had Quadrangle close to the pace from the start.

The purse boosted his total winnings to $340,499.

The Rokeby Stable colt, a son of Cohoes-Tap Day, by Bull Lea, had finished fifth in the Kentucky Derby and fourth in the Preakness before he came back a week ago for a powerful second against older horses in the Metropolitan Mile.

HIS DAY

But today was his day as he turned back the bid of the 3-to-5 favorite Northern Dancer, in a great stretch run.

The Dancer, seeking to become the ninth winner of the triple crown, couldn't even save second money for his Toronto industrialist owner, E. P. Taylor. Roman Brother came up and left him lengths behind in the final 16th of a mile.

Willie Shoemaker, astride Hill Rise from George A. Pope Jr.'s El Peccu Ranch, lodged the foul claim against Bill Hartack, up on Northern Dancer.

Shoemaker claimed the Dancer came over on his horse rounding the final turn, but the stewards allowed the order of finish to stand. That placed Brave Lad fifth, Orientalist sixth, Determined Man seventh and Shook eighth.

Peter Duff of Mountforte in County Louth was arrested by traffic officer Pat Devin, who told the court:

"I was motorcycling toward Collan when I saw a car with a trailer, travelling very slowly ahead of me. I could not see anyone behind the steering wheel of the car. When I came level with it I saw that the defendant (Duff) was in the front passenger seat, and steering the car from this position. Sitting in the driver's seat was a sheep dog.

The court heard other charges against Duff—no driver's licence, no insurance, driving a defective vehicle, driving dangerously and driving while under the influence of drink.

District Judge Henry McCourt called Duff's physician, Dr. William Irwin, as a witness. The doctor testified that Duff also told him his dog was a driver who "not only
